PROFESSOR of the art of printing, who is sojourning with us, came into the Topics sanctum sat down to rest. "Couldn't you reel out a story about the last time you were in Rio de Jenerio?" he was

"Never been in Rio," said he.

"Well, Bagdad, then." "Never been in Bagdad, either; but if you are not particular as to geography you shall have your yarn. These events which I am about to relate occurred in Central America. I was traveling-on the country. I was furnishing my own transportation. Rum was cheaper than water, or at least easier to get; for the rum was in the house and the water had to be toted. Go up to a house and ask for a drink and they would generally bring you to a bottle s of rum, along with a calabash of water, sometimes, as a sort of afterthought. I came to an Indian village the inhabitants of which appeared very friendly. The head man invited me to become his guest, and as my clothes wanted washing, I decided to accept. I stayed in the village three days. During that time life was one grand, sweet song; a regular symphony of rum. On the third day I riz up and departed. The road was a mountainous one, and grievous to travel. The sun, moreover, was exceedingly hot; so, after journeying many hours I finally lay down under the shade of a tree for to rest. When I awoke I was several hundred degrees nearer sobriety than when I lay down, and my ideas as to the events of the immediate past were inconclusive, not to say, vague. Which direction had I been journeying? That was a question over which I pondered until my head ached. In both directions the road looked unfamiliar. Finally I decided that the onexpected to stay there always. I did so, and after six or seven hours hard
