Jean Radski and Anna Zobelski working hard to get enough money together to be married, for Anna had but a very small dot. One day a man came to the village and put up at the inn. He hailed from Moscow, but he did not explain the reason of his coming. He did not take up any business or profession, and after he had been in the place awhile people began to wonder who he was and what was his errand. All they knew of him was investigate the extent of an oil field his name, Peter Petroff, and that they learned from him.

One evening Anna and Jean and Peter Petroff met at a dance. Anna was A Reliable Medicine—Not a Narcotic. a pretty girl, and Petroff fell in love with her at sight. He asked her to dance with him, and she accepted. He asked her again, and she declined. She did not care to dance twice with any one except her lover. So Petroff asked her if she would not "sit out" the dance with him, as we call it in America. Not wishing to offend him,

Petroff made the acquaintance of Anna's father and succeeded in ingra-tiating himself into the old man's good races. This gave him free access to the house and to Anna. Petroff told Zobelski that he had a comfortable income and was well able to support a wife. He asked for Anna. Her father told him that Anna was already betrothed. Petroff expressed surprise at what he already knew and much regret. Zobeiski was vexed that Anna was tied to Jean, because he thought Petroff would be a much better hus-

Anna was very much troubled when she heard this. She dared not tell Jean lest it bring about trouble between him and Petroff. Petroff ceased to offer attentions to Anna and treated Jean whenever he met him with great friendliness. This did not disarm Anna's suspicion that there was son thing wrong about Petroff and that he would gladly get Jean out his way.

Petroff had been at the village about two months without any visible occupation when one morning there was a large number of arrests in the neighborhood of persons charged with plotwas the surprise of every one to learn that Jean Radski was among the num-

It was plain to Anna that this man Petroff had come among them as a spy for the government; that he had sent in the names of certain persons as plotters and had included Jean's name for the purpose of getting him out of his way. In a country like Russia, where persons are arrested with-out due process of law and hurried off to Siberia without trial, this was a very simple method for Petroff to get rid of one whose place he desired to

This explanation of Jean's arrest was, of course, all inference with Anna and was not remotely suspected by Jean himself. There are certain and when they thus arrive at concludons they are sure of them.

Anna resolved to play a bold game. She sent for Petroff to come and see

"My father has told me of your offer for my band. Of course I could not accept it before Jean's arrest. But his complicity with these plotters against the government absolves me from my pledge to him. Jean has 3,000 rubles for our wedding I wish him to give them to me, If you can find a way for me to see him so that I can get him to tell me where I can find this money I will marry you

"All I can do," replied Petroff, "is to take you out on the road the prisoners are marching on, which is well known

"Very well; let us go. I will have s sleigh ready in a few minutes." Petroff drove off a very happy man Petroff drove off a very happy man. He was surprised that after getting Jean out of his way he abould have succeeded with Anna without any effort, and he congratulated himself that Anna did not suspect that he was the cause of her lover's arrest. But he had not thought she was so mercenary. He had proceeded several miles when, coming to a rise in the ground, the prisoners were seen some distance shead slowly walking, loaded with ball and chain and guarded by troops.
