NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given by the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of Asheville, as required by law, that the city engineer has made a survey and filed his report in the office of the city clerk, showing the amount of work done and the cost thereof in the matter of paving and otherwise improving Aston street in said city, and also showing the name of each abutting owner thereof, the number of front feet of each lot and the pro rata share of cost of such street improvement to be assessed against such real estate. And notice is hereby further given that at the first regular meeting of the said board of aldermen, to be held after the expiration of ten (10) days from this date, said board of aldermen will consider said report and if no valid objections be made thereto the same will be adopted and approved by said board and the liens and assessments of said street improvement will then become a lien and charge on the real estate of the abutting owners.

For horse complaints in children always give Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and you will find it certain to effect a cure and when combined with water will give relief to the sufferer.

IN FICHU FINERY.

Revival of These Dainty Old World Accessories.

CHARMING FICHU DESIGNS.

The most distinctive of the new fichus is the model with jabot ends. This dainty accessory is of sheer handkerchief linen and suggests a Dutch neck at the back. A slide of lace takes the place of a brooch fastening. Another charming fichu is the Charlotte Corday of hand-colored linen trimmed with real chamois lace. A sailor collar almost reaches the waist in the back, and the little tabs in front are modestly folded under a huge breast pin.

A Nursery Romance.
Much has been written about a suitable bride for the Prince of Wales, but no one who has discussed the subject in print seems to be aware of the nursery romance which started when the little Grand Duchess Olga, eldest daughter of the czar and czarina, was at Baltimore with her parents. The Prince of Wales, a baby, too, took a violent fancy to his small second cousin. In those days the Grand Duchess could not talk, so she only laughed and put her tongue out at her would be suitor. A few years ago, when the czar and czarina brought over their family in the imperial yacht to Cowes, Prince Edward again met the grand duchess, who is growing up to be a tall girl, the image of her mother, and his royal highness, boylike, fought rather shy of her. But onlookers, as usual, seeing most of the game, noted that he cast many admiring glances at his pretty cousin and she at him.

It's Plain, but Very Smart.
If this attractive suit, which is the creation of a famous French dressmaker, is to be taken as a harbinger of fall styles all women will rejoice in the tailored trappings and grace that are theirs. The lines of the suit are sharp and distinctive. The coat is an admirable length and is just loose enough to be comfortable for everyday wear. The skirt is particularly good looking and, while narrow enough to suggest slenderness, is not extreme. This dainty little suit is best of society making, which has all the appearance of a chemise, but sheds dust more readily.

Leonore was marvelously beautiful. When she passed along the street persons would turn to look after her. At social gatherings the hum of chat among those about her would cease, all being intent in admiring the curves of her figure and the exquisite cast of her face. From childhood, though her parents endeavored to keep a knowledge of her gift from her, she could not but know it. Persons are less careful of making a child vain than a woman.

Leonore did not grow to be a vain woman. But since the only gift of which she was made aware was her beauty, she came to prize it. Seeing others about her courted for this or that possession, she came to regard her own blessing as the only means of keeping her in her eminent position. So long as her beauty lasted so long would she be admired. When her beauty was one she must sink to the level of ordinary persons.

But one real lover worshiped Leonore, and unfortunately for him he could find no corresponding gift to hers in himself to warrant his aspirations with regard to her. He considered himself as set aside by fate from possessing her; not an adverse fate, simply fate. At an early age he found himself at the head of a family—his father's family. His father had died, and the boy took up the man's work. He did not regret doing so, nor was he proud to do so. He considered that he was doing what it was natural for him to do. Had he been granted time enough before assuming these responsibilities perhaps he might have placed himself in a position from which he could advance. As it was, he was but a bookkeeper.

When Leonore was thirty she fell ill. During her illness it became necessary that she should submit to a serious operation. For weeks after it had been performed she hovered between life and death. For months after she passed out of danger she was obliged to be wheeled about in her chair. During her convalescence she would not look into a mirror. Her nurse dressed her hair long after she was able to do so herself, because Leonore could not bear to see her altered appearance. But one day she made up her mind that if her beauty had departed she must submit to the loss. Ignoring it would not restore it. She called for a mirror.

Great heavens! Were those pale features hers? Was she looking out of those dull eyes? Did that mixture of gray and black hair grow on her head? She dropped the mirror on her lap and covered her face with her hands.

One day when she had so far improved in health as to walk out she met the bookkeeper. So many persons had passed her without recognizing her that she wondered if he, too, would do so. She had known him since childhood. She knew his situation, but his views concerning it were not hers. She felt that he was making a sacrifice—a sacrifice that she could not make. Indeed, during the time her beauty had remained to her she had considered it a very poor equivalent for his uncomplaining acceptance of a duty. And now that she was below the average in personal appearance his advantage over her seemed to have become a mountain between them. As he approached her heart almost stopped beating.

He not only recognized her, but if he experienced any shock at her changed appearance he did not show it. He had not loved her for her beauty, and his loss did not therefore affect him as much as was to have been expected. Indeed, his mind was moving in another channel. He had always felt that Leonore's beauty was a barrier between them. While she had been ill his mother had died, and the older children had become independent. While he sympathized with Leonore at the loss of her beauty, the fact rushed upon him that the only inequality between them had vanished. And yet that loss she prized so dearly endeared her the more to him.

Leonore was right in supposing that the especial prominence she enjoyed would die with her beauty. One does not give up such prominence without a pang! But Leonore was pleased to notice that a few who had been nearest and dearest to her were in no wise changed with regard to her. People passed her on the street without looking at her. At social functions the young men were no longer brought up in throngs to be presented to her. She did not go to balls, for she knew that her card instead of being full to overflowing would be a blank.

Her Beauty

At social functions the young men were no longer brought up in throngs to be presented to her. She did not go to balls, for she knew that her card instead of being full to overflowing would be a blank.

But one thing she had gained. The bookkeeper—he was not now an accountant, but the manager of the business where he had been an underling—was devoted to her. The feeling that he lived for her went far beyond compensation for the loss of that admiration she had received from strangers. A happiness stole into her heart more precious than the admiration of the throng.

And now Leonore, a middle aged woman, with children, has forgotten what she ever so much prized, and wonders why she prized it. The admiration it brought her was as short lived as that which had caused it. Her husband and her children are all in all to her. She does not even know that with the return of health her physical appearance is to the beauty of her youth what autumn is to spring.
