MONEY IN GETTING EVICTED.

Englishwoman's Novel Begging Scheme Puts Fortune in Her Bank.

New York Herald.
A new form of "getting rich quick" was uncovered in the court of special sessions, when Judges Deuel, Mayo, and O'Keefe found Mrs. Rifka Suskind guilty of using her two children to solicit alms. After Mrs. Suskind had served five days in the workhouse, she will be deported to England, where, it is alleged, she has on deposit with the Bank of England a fortune accumulated by posing as an evicted tenant.

According to the superintendent of the Children's society, the woman first was evicted in 1908, when she was living in an East side tenement house. While huddled on the sidewalk with her furniture, Mrs. Suskind collected several dollars from persons passing by. Then she decided to make a specialty of being dispossessed.

Testimony was that the woman has been arrested seven times for begging, and that she has been evicted many times. Witnesses declared she hired a man suffering from tuberculosis to pose with her and her two children. A soup plate on a broken and battered piece of furniture was used as a money receptacle. There was $18 in the plate when the woman was arrested in Clinton street. It was decided she has sent from $150 to $300 to England every month for four years.

Burned Hubby's Joy Togs.

Wilkes-Barre Dispatch to New York World.

To prevent her husband from being popular with other women, Mrs. Maggie Reilly burned up all his good clothes while he was at work, and now he has only his working clothes until pay day. Mrs. Reilly got the belief that her husband was partial to other women. She made a fine bonfire, and the police and the fire department rushed to the place. Mrs. Reilly was arrested and fined $5. But she said she was satisfied since Reilly could not make a hit with his joy togs.

DEVICE DEFIES SMOKE.

Fireman's Invention Carries Air to Fighters Through a Hose.

New York Times.
An opportunity to try out a new smoke protector came when a little blaze started in a cellar at 62 West Houston street.

The smoke defier was invented by James D. Halloran, of Engine Company No. 23, now temporarily attached to Engine Company No. 26. It consists of a length of garden hose, reinforced by spiral wire, and is stretched from the street with the fire hose. The outside end of this small hose contains a screen to prevent foreign objects from being sucked into it while in use. The other end is held by rubber attachments close to the nozzle of the fire hose. Attached to the inside of the small hose are several small tubes leading to a device resembling the nose guard used by football players. It fits securely over the nose, and is held in position by the pressure of the feet. The operation depends on a simple principle of physics. The high pressure of the steam as it leaves the nozzle of the fire hose creates a temporary vacuum at that point and fresh air from the outside is drawn in through the little tubes having their origin in the end of the small hose, supplying him with fresh air, no matter how smoke-filled the room may be.

Battalion Chief Helm witnessed the test, which was made by Capt. Biggers and Firemen Saunders and McGrath. They agreed that the device was a success, saying that, though the cellar was filled with smoke, they experienced no difficulty in breathing. Fire Commissioner Johnson, it is said, has assured Mr. Halloran that if further experiments prove the invention a success it will be adopted throughout the city. Mr. Halloran will be kept with Engine Company No. 26 for some time yet, because the district covered by that company is productive of cellar fires, which lend themselves particularly to experiments with the helmet. Cellar fires are usually smoky, and on that account difficult to fight.

Halloran's invention was something of a surprise to his fellow firemen. For months he had been working on something, but they could not guess what. He would slip himself up in his locker room during much of his leisure time, and tinker and draw but just what he was doing no one could learn. Some of his colleagues thought he must be studying to take the examination for assistant foreman, and the man of paper about his room was supposed to represent his work on possible examination problems.

Fringe and Tassels.

New York Press.

Fringe and tassels now are the fad. They go with every sort of dress, coat, hat, parasol, or umbrella. There is fringe of every color and shade, designed to harmonize with the gown and to add to the general effectiveness of millady's toilet. The use of fringe is so great that modistes are out to their wits' end trying to devise original ways of using it. The fringe is put on skirts and tunics. It is introduced on bodices. There are rows of it on the sleeves and across the back. It is sewn lengthwise and crossways on the skirts. The newest novelty is a fringe fan, consisting of a thick cluster of long velvet fringe which has fastenings the small fan hanging from the waist. There are enough ways of using fringe to dazzle the ordinary man, but woman seems to know just how to make use of yards and yards of it, regardless of the expense. Umbrellas have more tassels than ever.
