ALL ENTRY LISTS SWELL RAPIDLY

Exhibitors Got Busy Yesterday—Some Departments of the Fair Full to Overflowing.

LIVE STOCK SECTION WILL BE EXCELLENT

Apple Show at the Fair Will Be Superb, Considering Shortness of the Crop.

After a hard season's campaign for the first Western North Carolina fair, the officers of the association are able now to see some very definite results of their work, and they can see in these the realization of the hope they have entertained that this fair will be second to none but the state fair at Raleigh.

Today is the last day when entries will be received, and, as a result, entries in nearly every department are coming in fast. Secretary Owen Gudger stated that there were more entries made yesterday than had been made altogether before that. Today the rush has increased and the variety and number of entries is fully equal to the hopes of the association officers.

The Agricultural Exhibit. The exhibits are entered in the different departments according to the catalogue of premiums, and Secretary Gudger gave a careful review of that department in the light of entries already made. The exhibition of field and garden crops, which constitute the largest and most complete shown at any fair in the state, and there will be strong competition for practically every premium offered.

Heading the premium list in this department is an aggregate first prize of $100 and second prize of $50 for the best, most complete and most attractive display of agriculture products. There are a great many other premiums offered in this department for a variety of things.

Horses. Department B includes horses and mules and there are some very handsome premiums offered for these. There are already quite a number entered, about 30, and practically every premium will be competed for. Besides the cash prizes, ribbons will also be given and some very fine stock will be seen at the fair.

Cattle. The entries in the cattle department are already very complete and nearly every class will be represented, and in some the competition will be extremely strong. Some of the herd from the Biltmore estate will be exhibited but will not compete for the cash prizes.

The sheep list is not so complete, as the different varieties are not well represented in this section, but the entries already made are very fine.

The swine department is already run over with entries and every class is well represented. Attractive cash prizes are offered and the competition will be hot as some exceedingly fine hogs are entered.

The poultry department is showing up very well from entries already received, and is pretty good for the off season when people do not care especially to have their birds exhibited. There is no entrance fee in this department and a number of other entries will doubtless be received this afternoon. The pet stock division will probably be very light.

Fruit. In the horticultural department, the fruit exhibits promise to be very good in view of the fact that the fruit crop was practically a failure in Buncombe this year. Secretary Gudger thinks, (Continued on page 6)

ROAD SENTENCE IMPOSED ON ARTHUR C. ANDERSON

Gets 12 Months for Shooting Stamey and Appeals—Bond Is Fixed at $1000.

Arthur C. Anderson was arraigned before Judge Adams in Police court this morning on the charge of assaulting C. C. Stamey on the evening of September 12 with intent to kill. He was sentenced to 12 months on the county roads and appealed.

It will be remembered that on that date Stamey was shot at the home of Anderson about 8 o'clock in the evening. The bullet entered his right side, penetrating the lung and lodging near the spine. Drs. A. T. Pritchard and E. B. Glenn attended the wounded man, took him to the Mission hospital and removed the bullet. He left the hospital a week ago.

About the same time Anderson, who had been held in custody, pending an investigation, was released on $1000 bond. The general report, circulated from the first, was that both men claimed it was accidental. Still this did not seem to fit in very well with the fact that Anderson was held for some time without bail.

In the trial this morning Jones and Williams and J. Frazier Glenn represented the defendant. There was no prosecuting attorney. There was considerable argument at the beginning as to whether or not Judge Adams had final jurisdiction in the case, that is, whether or not the charge constituted a felony or a mere misdemeanor. Judge Adams held out for a long time that he did not think it was a case for one man to try, but the attorney for the defense contended that the case was only a misdemeanor and cited cases and sections of statutes supporting their position.

C. C. Stamey, the man who was wounded, was the leading witness and was the first to be put on the stand. He said that he had gone to the Anderson home a short while before the shooting occurred, that Anderson and his wife were quarreling in some way over the baby and some pretty rough things were said. Attorneys for the defense tried to get the witness to admit that this was "horse play" and was said laughingly, but he said he saw no laughing. When the remarks were made, he said he remonstrated saying that both should be ashamed of themselves, whereupon Anderson asked him what he had to do with it and asked him not to "butt in." Anderson then ran into the house, he stated, and returned in a few moments. Upon Anderson's return, he testified that he had remarked that there was no use getting a gun as he had none himself, nor did he even have a knife. There was then an alleged remark by the defendant to the effect that both had always been good friends and he wanted no one "butting in" to his affairs. That was the last said, according to Stamey, before he was shot.

He admitted having told several people that the shooting was accidental and he said he thought at the time it was. He also admitted that Anderson had done all he could for him in getting doctors and nurses, and other aid for him, meeting all the expenses.

Only two other important witnesses were introduced. The first of these, D. E. Green, stated that he heard the shot and screams and ran to the scene; that he found Stamey sitting in a rocking chair bleeding, and Anderson was on the porch. He said Anderson made the statement to him that "Stamey had come up while he and his wife were talking; he told him he had no business there and then shot him."

Will Coble, the other witness, said that he was up stairs when the shot was fired, that he ran down and found Stamey lying on the bed, and Anderson and his wife standing by the bedside. He said he heard Stamey make the statement then that the shooting was accidental. Other witnesses called for the State said they knew nothing about the affair.

The defense did not offer any testimony but a few character witnesses were introduced and each testified that Anderson's character had always been good. His attorneys then plead with the court, after a verdict of guilty had been entered, to punish the defendant with a fine instead of a road sentence, since it was in the discretion of the court to give either. They thought this would be sufficient punishment and would save the man's family much suffering and disgrace.

The court held, however, that this would be insufficient and sentenced Anderson to 12 months on the county roads. Appeal was taken and bond was fixed at $1000.
