A friend of Appetite and Digestion

Cottolene agrees with the stomach because it contains no indigestible hog fat. It is made from choice, refined cotton oil, which modern physicians recommend as being fully as healthful as olive oil. Goes one-third farther than butter or lard. For shortening or frying there's nothing to equal Cottolene—

HYPNOTIZED, WOMAN BECOMES A SONG-BIRD

Under Physician's Spell, San Francisco Sings with Astonishing Power.

San Francisco, Nov. 3.—Under the influence of a hypnotic spell cast over her by Dr. F. G. De Stone, who asserts that he will in this way cure her of a serious throat affection, Mrs. Anna Tregear gave a series of vocal recitations that would ordinarily have been beyond her ability. The experiment was witnessed by Mrs. Emma Eames and Emilio De Gogorza.

The noted singers declared the performance one of the most remarkable exhibitions that had ever come under their observation. Mrs. Tregear, who before being afflicted with throat trouble, gave promise of an exceptionally fine voice, but under the hypnotic treatment, and while under the hypnotic spell her complaint seems to disappear and she can readily sing an octave above normal range.

As Mrs. De Stone sat at the piano and started the opening chords of "Charmant Oiseau," from "Perle Du Bresil," Mrs. Tregear leaned back in an easy chair and closed her eyes. Dr. De Stone made several hypnotic passes over her head, and in a few seconds she sat erect and began to sing. Her voice, which was weak at first, gained in volume until the song ended finally in remarkable brilliancy. At its close the singer remained in her hypnotic trance and volunteered to sing again.

Mr. De Gogorza and Mrs. Eames declined to express an opinion about the merits of the voice, but declared that if Mrs. Tregear had previously an impediment in her voice the experiment was marvellous. Under the influence of Dr. De Stone Mrs. Tregear imagined that she was Mme. Di Murska, a famous Russian singer, and when spoken to replied in broken English, although when normal her English is faultless.

Only a woman can understand the prostrating effect of disorders in the female organism—the misery of it and its depressing influence on the mind. It exercises a powerful restorative influence on the female generative system, builds up a strong body, restores healthy regularity and promotes cheerfulness and a clear, rosy complexion. ### A Thanksgiving Package

By SHEILA ESTHER DUNN
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"We're too poor, John," said Mrs. Hardwick to her husband, "to have a Thanksgiving dinner this year. Besides, we've nothing to be thankful for. The loss of our little Molly has taken all the thankfulness out of me."

John said what he could to comfort his wife, but there is little comfort in such partings, and a happy family circle had been broken by the loss of little Molly, the baby. It had occurred as many misfortunes occur from poverty. This is the way it happened:

Mrs. Hardwick was taken ill when the baby was but six months old. John was away, and there was no one to attend to her or the household, and more especially the baby, who needed more attention than any of the family. A neighbor came in to take charge and concluded to send Molly away till the mother should have recovered. Mrs. Hardwick had an aunt living at the next station on the railroad, and since the aunt could not leave her home it was decided to send the baby to her in the care of an express messenger. A bassinet was fitted out, the baby put into it and a tag with the address on it, both the shipper and the consignee tied on it. Then the "package" was taken to the messenger, who had charge of an express car, and he agreed to take it to its destination.

Unfortunately an accident occurred on the railroad that spoiled all these calculations. A man passing the scene of the accident, hearing a cry from some bushes beside the track, sought the cause and found Molly. Near by lay her bassinet. She was alive and apparently unharmed. A child falls without restraint and is therefore much less liable to injury than an adult. Besides, in this case the fall was supposed to have been broken by the bushes. The finder took up the child and its bassinet and carried it home to his wife. The bassinet had fallen into a ditch, and the address on it had been so discolored by the water that it was unrecognizable.

Now, Molly had fallen into the hands of a couple who had no children and had given up all hope of having children. Not knowing where to send Molly, they concluded to keep her, at least till they could find her parents, and if not found they would adopt her.

After the accident the Hardwicks learned nothing of their child. The express messenger had been killed, they could not learn where the baby was at the time of the accident, and she was never found. But this was not remarkable, for on one side of the railroad was a stream, and the body might have been thrown from the car into the water and carried away by the current.

At any rate, there was not the slightest probability that Molly was alive, and her parents mourned her as lost. Mrs. Hardwick recovered from her illness, and the family affairs were set to rights, all except the return of little Molly.

The day before Thanksgiving pitying friends sent the Hardwicks a dinner for the occasion. But the mourning mother declared that she had not the heart to cook it. Thanksgiving day being a holiday, John stayed at home, but there was no rejoicing. The children found it difficult to make a holiday when their parents were so dismal. At noon the little ones began to feel hungry, and yielding to their importunities, their mother consented to roast a turkey that had been sent them. She had hardly got it in the oven when there was the sound of a heavy truck stopping before the house. A man ran up the steps and kicked at the door. When it was opened the cause of his kicking was apparent. Both of the man's hands were in use. In one he held a bassinet, in the other a book.

"Sign for this," he said.

There was a simultaneous exclamation of surprise and joy from the family as Molly was handed in. Looking up at her mother, she smiled and cooed. Mrs. Hardwick seized her and clasped her to her breast.

"Sign for this," repeated the man, holding out the book in which he took receipts for express matter.

Mr. Hardwick hurriedly scratched his name, and the expressman, running down the steps, mounted his wagon and drove away.

And so it was that the Hardwicks' holiday was made both a day of rejoicing and of thankfulness. When they sat down to dinner the baby in its bassinet was placed on the table, and while its parents and brothers and sisters ate turkey Molly pulled lustily on her bottle.

An explanation came in time. One day the couple who had taken Molly in heard from a friend of the Hardwicks' of their loss, and it became apparent that they were in possession of the missing child. This occurred the day before Thanksgiving, and a pleasant surprise was arranged for the parents. The baby was taken to an express office, where it was given in charge of a delivery man, who was instructed to carry it to its home.

That day was remembered as the Thanksgiving of their lives. At any rate, they had more to be thankful for than ever before or afterward. Little Molly was often referred to as the express package, and the souvenir stuck to her. When she grew old enough she was told the story of her strange adventure and never ceased to wonder that one so young could have gone through so much.

Soda crackers are extremely sensitive to moisture.

Before the advent of Uneeda Biscuit the only persons who ever tasted fresh, crisp soda crackers were the people in the bakeries.

Imagine their trip from bakery to your table; exposed to air and moisture—kept in grocers' boxes and finally in a paper bag on the shelf in your pantry. Could they be the same as they were the day they were baked?

Now that we have Uneeda Biscuit—we have perfectly baked soda crackers—perfectly kept.

No moisture can reach them—no contaminating influences can affect their flavor—their goodness is imprisoned only to be liberated by you for you when you open the package.
