TONIGHT AT 3:20—"The Girl of the Golden West."

Monday, Dec. 4.—Miss Nobody from Starland.

"The Girl of the Golden West." Not in many years has a musical or theatrical announcement created such universal interest as that Henry W. Savage's special production in opera chorus of 50, five complete acts of principals, and three celebrated conductors. Thus who recall the Savage productions of Madam Butterfly, Parsifal and Die Walkure will realize the treat which is in store for them. Grand opera at best is a dubious point of view and can only be undertaken by a man of great wealth, as with every seat in the house sold it is doubtful whether the receipts in this city will be sufficient to meet the enormous expense involved.

At the matinee performance the following principals will sing: Irma Dalossy, Dina Puglia, Umberto Sacchetti, and William Beck, Giorgio Polacco conducting.

At the evening performance the following principals will sing: Irma Scott, Edna de Dreux, Henri Baran, Carl Gantvoort, Mr. Caesar Soder, conducting.

Tickets are selling at box office.

Editor may have had in mind may not be clear to those progressive given to frequent periods of eruption, but we have an idea a good many of them will find time for a season of introspection, to determine whether they are progressing in the right direction or in a direction that is likely to prove pleasing to the colonel. Mr. Roosevelt seldom fails, in delivering his messages to the people, to set in motion some new psychic current, and this last contribution is no exception. "Sincere rural Tories" is destined to live, along with swollen fortunes, predatory wealth, and the Square Deal.

Finally, it may be said that Mr. Roosevelt has suggested a platform around which all forms of business, big and little, may gather with perfect safety, a viewpoint in our governmental affairs which the generosity of people may ponder with profit.—Greensboro News.

JUROR'S OPINION UPSETS A TRIAL

The trial of Lillian Graham and Ethel Conrad, the two show girls on trial in New York city on the charge of attempting to murder millionaire W. E. D. Stokes, was halted until the Court dismissed one of the jurors, Terry Hinkle, who, it was alleged, had expressed an opinion at a dinner which was adverse to the two women on trial. It came near being declared a mistrial.

UNLESS CONGRESS ABDICATES.

The tariff board will within a very short time submit to Mr. Taft its report on the wool and woollen schedule; later in the session its report on the cotton schedule and at some indefinite time next year its report on the metal schedule is expected. There are eleven other schedules in the Payne-Aldrich tariff, of which the tariff board has reported only on the paper schedule in connection with Canadian reciprocity.

In his recent tour Mr. Taft declared in public speeches that he would veto any tariff bills passed by congress affecting industries on which the tariff board had not reported.

Mr. Taft therefore undertakes absolutely to prohibit congress from touching a single one of ten schedules, while declaring in his speeches that "protection in the past has been too high and that it is possible to lower the tariff so as not to interfere with business." He declares in effect that he will not permit congress to lower any duty on chemicals, woods and manufactures of woods, agricultural products and provisions, fibre and silk upon hundreds of articles in commerce. He will only permit it to deal with such items as the tariff board may report on; and even upon such schedules he will presumably withhold the executive approval unless congress legislates along the lines laid down by the tariff board.

This is plain usurpation of power. Without constitutional warrant he assumes the authority to narrow the fixed right of congress to legislate on the tariff. Purely of his own will he prescribes in advance precisely what it may do and what it may not do. He decrees offhand that five men of his naming shall be superior to the elected congress and shall say when how and on what conditions revenue laws shall be made.

Unless the present recedes from his position of congress abdicates, the time is at hand when Mr. Taft must again stand ready to abuse the authority of his office in defiance of the popular will and again to invite his own defeat in 1912.—New York World.

Henry W. Savage has outdone all his past triumphs in his present production. There is but one word will fitly describe the undertaking—colossal. An entire special train is required to transport the company, orchestra, scenery, horses and electrical effects. In the carefulness with which every detail has been wrought out the production of this marvelous work at the Metropolitan Opera house, New York, has been equaled and surpassed. The entire undertaking is upon a marvellous scale. There are tons and tons of scenery, a car load of horses, a small army of choristers, a grand

PRESS COMMENT.

Whether Mr. Roosevelt himself would be able to command a greater measure of support than could the Wisconsin senator, since so many western republicans are already committed to his cause.

Mr. Roosevelt's boldness and temerity, which admirers will regard as characteristic, is disclosed in still other directions. A word is put in for the "good" trusts for Morgan interests "that have been so kind to us," to revert to the days of the Harriman correspondence, and this has given critics an opportunity to charge that Mr. Roosevelt, as a candidate for the nomination for the presidency, is entertaining the hope of being able to bring Wall street to his support, hoping that the street will accept his assurances at par, and that western republicans will rally to his standard with an equal degree of enthusiasm. Those who take this view of the situation must of necessity admire the colonel's unparalleled audacity, for few men would care to undertake the delicate feat of bringing Wall street and the insurgent west together in a common cause.

In point of fact, there is no fatal conflict between the views expressed by Mr. Roosevelt in the Outlook, and those entertained by him while an occupant of the White House, when actually confronted with the problems about which he now writes. While president Mr. Roosevelt alluded to the Sherman anti-trust law as a "sure road to business chaos if administered in its letter and spirit," and upon several occasions he spoke of the wisdom of amending the law. He now feels that Mr. Taft and his law department are about to run amuck, and doubtless much to the amazement of a number of worthy persons, he sounds a warning. A high respect of the constitution is disclosed, constructive legislation, rather than confusing court decisions, is favored, and a sort of commercial commission, corresponding with the interstate commerce commission, is advocated as a means of dealing with the larger corporations.

Mr. Roosevelt writes as one having acquired a sense of new proportion, a new perspective. Once upon a time Chancellor Day of Syracuse university, the colonel's particular antithesis, declared, in criticism leveled at the then occupant of the White House, that a court controlling a government by commissions a personal interpretation of the constitution, did not suggest a republic. Chancellor Day said this in variations which finally took book form. This book we believe Colonel Roosevelt has read, and we have an idea that he has been chastened thereby. Mr. Roosevelt now points to the danger of an indiscriminate prosecution of all forms of corporate business, to the mischief that may be done by an "assault on property," as the chancellor put it, and the college man did the same thing in language markedly familiar. Moreover, Mr. Roosevelt says things that will inevitably give the progressives pause. Allusion is made to those who may be inclined to applaud a blanket prosecution of corporations whose offenses lie wholly in their size, as opposed to the misguided band of rural Tories. ILLNESS ALTERED PLANS OF THIS INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE

The marriage of Miss Mildred Sherman and Lord Camoys, which was originally scheduled to take place on December 2 in New York, was advanced to November 24 owing to the serious illness of W. Watts Sherman, father of the bride. The ceremony was witnessed by relatives only. Mrs. Lawrence Gillespie, a sister of the bride, was the only attendant. It had been planned to have a brilliant wedding, with all the town's society people in attendance.
