Route for Tomorrow.
 The Santa Claus wagon is meeting with greater success in the collection of contributions for the poor of the city than was expected. The people of the city are opening their hearts to the good cause and if, during the rest of the time the wagon is out, it meets with equal success, there is promise that those of the city who are not able to help themselves will be given a Christmas treat such as they have never before experienced. Clothing, food, groceries and money are solicited and the boys on the wagon are authorized by the Associated Charities to collect any and all of these, so that no one may feel that it is not proper to contribute anything they wish to those who are making the rounds with the wagon. The route of the wagon for tomorrow is repeated here in order that everybody may remember it:

Friday.
 North Main street to Merrimon avenue; out Merrimon to Chestnut, Chestnut to Central avenue and back to Liberty; Liberty to Hillside, Hillside to East street and back to Merrimon; out Merrimon to Woolsey and back to West Chestnut, to North Main, to Starnes avenue, to Flint and return to Park square.

White-Young.
 The people of Asheville will be surprised to learn that on the fourth of September, T. Perry Young of this city was married to Miss Stella White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. White of Hickory. The ceremony was performed on the date mentioned in the suburbs of Spartanburg, and since that time the affair has been kept a secret. The bride will come to Asheville within a few days, and then Mr. and Mrs. Young will take up their residence for a while at the Southern hotel. Later they will go to house-keeping. Their many friends in Asheville and in this section will be pleased to learn of this wedding and the young couple will doubtless receive their hearty good wishes.

In the Millennium—When Our Weather Man Becomes Politic.

Judge's Library.
 If it suits the great American people, Tuesday will be a bit blustery. Your humble weather prognosticator would beg of you to remember that winter is now upon us and that the unpleasant days have been held off as long as possible. If it is the will of the majority, the morning will open up with sun, grow a bit troubled by noon, then cloud over rapidly until, by the middle of the afternoon, the atmospheric conditions will make a fire seem more cheerful than usual. The man behind your weather bureau would remind you that this is the best he can do by you, and that, by beginning with a fair morning and have the day grow clouded as the hours pass away, a sudden change is thus avoided and many ruffled nerves are saved. On account of the extreme lateness of the season, the bureau would call the fact to your attention that many worse days have been experienced at this time of the year, and that it has striven hard to suit the majority. A little fortitude and patience on your part will make the day slip by much more quickly, and the state of mind with which you receive it that morning, the department would point out, determines in a great way whether or not the day drags heavily on your hand.
