COMING ATTRACTIONS.

Tomorrow night—"The Dawn of a Tomorrow," Friday, Dec. 29—"Bailey and Austin in 'The Top of the World'."

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with matinees daily—Henry Ellsworth's "Oberammergau and Passion Play."

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow." The following criticism of "The Dawn of Tomorrow," which plays an engagement at the Auditorium tomorrow night was taken from the Atlanta Georgian and News of December 15:

Another good show has come to town. The fact is hereby recorded with joy and an easy conscience. Ye critical theatergoer who demands the best can go to the Atlanta with the assurance of not being disappointed while "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" is fulfilling an engagement there.

In the first place, the play is well written, rounded and complete. In the first act something is started, and it is finished in the third and last. There is an objective point throughout which is adhered to without useless meandering and the unfolding of the progress of the play is sure and certain, with lines which carry wit and wisdom, a sob and a song, a laugh and a tear in every word. "The play's the thing," we may say when a good company is seen struggling through the mazes of a bad play. Yet, when we see a really fine play made absurd by incompetent cast, we are not so sure. The truth is, the play and the cast have some merit in order to give pleasing effect—a triumph which does not seem to have made the impression it should have on the powers behind the stage in every instance.

In "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" as presented at the Atlanta, the company is as good as need be, and the play is also. The combination is not seen in Atlanta at every week.

Miss Isabel Lowe, as Glad, carries the burden of the play on her shoulders and she gets away with it in fine style. Eleanor Robinson may have created a different Glad, but it is hard for those who saw Miss Lowe to believe that Miss Robinson's Glad could have been a sweeter, more lovable, more natural character than that presented by Miss Lowe. She has grasped and conveyed to her audience the inner meaning of the play. And that is subtler than lies between the lines of most plays. A convincing manner and an exceptionally winsome way with her enable Glad to draw the hearts of her audience to her, even as she does the inhabitants of "Apple Blossom Court."

Harry Hoy, as Sir Oliver, and Conway Winfield, as the Dandy, are excellent members of the cast. And they, with Glad, complete the important roles of the cast. The minor roles are well filled, however, and especially striking is the make-up of every member. This is perfect and helps much to preserve the atmosphere of the scenes, in which the splendid stage settings also contribute.

Even the most unbelieving member of the audience who saw Glad's expressions in "arising and arising," to see if she "will receive," leaves the playhouse with a glow of optimism, cheered by Glad's faith and her truly expressed belief that "things are never as bad as you think they are." One is very glad that "the trick worked" with her, at any rate. Tickets are selling at Whitlock's.

Bailey and Austin in "The Top of the World."

When "The Top of the World," with Bailey and Austin, pulled out of the Majestic Theater, after playing that house one solid season, it left the whole city talking about it. The whole country has been talking about it ever since. It is a beautiful show, filled with magnificent pictures, catchy music and wonderful mechanical effects. Best of all it is purely an American production and appeals to both the classes and the masses, the old and the young. It tells the story of a little girl named Malda who was unhappy and wished to grow up all at once. A fairy, having her wish, carried her to the North, where Kris Kringle showed her his work-shop, and two of his most prized toys—"The Jack-in-the-Box" and "The Candy Kid." Kris Kringle told her that if she were to the top of the world and stood beside the North Pole that her wish would be granted. So they all started, Kris Kringle, Malda, Jack-in-the-Box, the Candy Kid, and a great white friend, polar bear that did funny tricks. Finally they arrived at the city of Illula, which was governed by Queen Aurore Borealis. After many interesting things had happened, Malda became convinced that it would, after all, be best to grow up like other little girls, so, standing beside the wishing pole, she bade farewell to all her friends and wished herself back in the apartment house. It really is a wonderful story and it is embellished by scores of beautiful girls in gorgeous costumes and enriched and enlivened by music of the prettiest and most delicate kind.

Bailey and Austin are supported by almost the entire original cast. It is the largest travelling theatrical organization in America this season, seventy people being carried, and all railroad movements are made by special train.

It furnishes three hours of the finest kind of fun and invariably sends its audience from the theater refreshed, satisfied and happy.

The Famous Collier Ballet, consisting of the six best-known dances in the world, still remains a big feature. Tickets now selling at Whitlock's.

"The Passion Play." At the Auditorium next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with matinees.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett as Isabelle Lowe in "Glad" at the Auditorium.

daily Mr. Henry Ellsworth, the noted traveler, will present his pictorial reproduction of "Oberammergau," its people and their Passion Play of 1910, coming from a brilliant series of entertainments at the New York Hippodrome. Mr. Ellsworth has been a resident of Oberammergau for the past eleven summers and spent five months there during the sacred drama of 1910.
