The Stowaway

By FRED L. YOUNG

I heard the words spoken by some one near me and, looking in the direc tion of other eyes, saw a lad being brought forward between two sailors. He was in rags, and what clothing clung to him was begrimed. The officer of the deck was standing by me and the boy was brought to him,

"I suppose you haven't any money to pay your fare?"

"No. sir." "Well, before you get ashore you'll wish you hadn't shipped that way. We work stowaways harder than any one else aboard this ship. We do that to keep others from doing the same thing." Then to the men who had him in charge, "Take him down into the engine room and set him to shoveling coal."

"You don't mean," I protested, "that you're going to put that delicate boy down in that frightful hole at such hard work?"

The man looked at me angrily. "It's against marine law for passengers to interfere with the officers of a ship. You'd better keep your suggestions to yourself."

The boy was taken below, and I saw no more of him that day. But I knew what shoveling coal on an ocean liner meant, and I didn't believe he could stand the work. I lay awake in my berth thinking about him and the terrible fate in store for so many human beings deprived of protection while others are pampered with every luxury. There were boys and girls on the ship occupying luxurious staterooms under the care of fond parents, so delicately nurtured altogether attractive. Hundreds of that it seemed as if a snow squall or a hot sun would wither them. And yet this poor boy, with the same kind of a body, the same immortal soul, must be put to work in an iron room far under water, where the temperature was over 100 degrees, and made to lift heavy scoops and throw the coal in them into the mouth of a fiery furnace.

The next day I joined a party of passengers who were to go through the engine room, and, descending the succession of from steps, we finally found ourselves in the ship's infernal regions I went down to the furnace, and there was the boyistaggering with the rest from the coel heaps to the mouth of the furnace. He was the only one thus engaged who were any clothing above his waist. How he stood the heat I could not sunderstand.

The sight was too much for me. I went up to the purser's office and took The sight was too much for me. a steeragespassage for the stowaway. then went down with an order permitting me to bring him on deck. I got him to a berth, and as soon as he entered it he collapsed. Possibly it was the readtion at knowing he need not work any longer in Tartarus; possibly he would not have stood the strain much longer anyway. I got the ship's surgeon to bring him up, but he needed nothing save rest.

After he had come to himself again I taked with him about himself, who he was and why he was trying to get to/America. He told me that he was going over totioin-a brother who would meet him in New York. The broth had promised to send him passage money, but had been thrown out of work during a strike, and the matter of going; over must have been deferred had it not been for the boy's determination to cross as a stowaway.

The tyoungster was very grateful to me for what I did for him. As we neared the American coast I noticed that/something was troubling him. I asked him whatist was, but did not get satisfaction. It was not fear of being deported, for the expected his brother to take caresof that, though just how was to be done he didn't tel me. He said finally that he needed some better clothing before going ashore. His brother (wouldn't know him in his rags. At any trate, he didn't wish to appear to himeso shabbily dressed. I offered to try to get him something better, but he declined to permit me to do so. Then he asked me if I would ask, a stewardless to come down and see him. I couldn't understand what he wanted of a stewardess, but bore h's message.

The day we reached port before going ashere I went down to see my protege and bld him goodby. Then I met with the surprise of my life. Not seeing him, I asked where he was. My informant pointed to a girl slink-ing away from me.

"I mean the boy I have seen here everal times the stowaway."

"That's the one," was the reply. I west up to the girl and recognized her an the youngster I had helped. What she had wanted the stewardess for was to get her some girl's cloth-ing. The stewardess had kept her secretyfrom me, but had appealed to some of the first class passengers, who had contributed a very nice ward-robe. Instead, of the ragged, begrimed boy I sawja very pretty, tastefully dressed girl.

I proposed to see the matter out. I took her ashore at the island, and her "brother" was, there to receive her. The two were clasped in each other's silent embrace for a long while be-fore either spoke, and when they did the eyes of both were wet with tears. The way/her-llover, for such he was,
