Colonel Thom explained, as did also President Finley, President Emerson and Presiden Harahan, that no one road is respon sible for the rates into a state from the west for instance and that no one road can change these. The rates of a milroad are based on the density of traffic in its territory and that ac counts for higher rates in one section of the country than in another, he said.

Getting Down to Business.

The North Carolina delegates, segregated in a corner, had been very quiet and orderly, but one now suggested that it would be well to have a credentials committee-one member from eral months. very state-to decide just who had a right to participate in the convention. This appeared to meet with favor as tending to narrow things down and assist in the squelching process; besides, the delegates said that they were going to want to vote on some questions very soon and it was already evi dent that votes were going to count The chairman agreed with him but felt that the naming of this committee was going to place him in a very embarraseing position. The North Carolinian replied that the internoon of the motion was for each delegation to elect its own member. The meet-ing then adjourned so the delegate could select the credentials commit-tee. This seemed to take a good tee. This meemed to take a good while, and the Hendersonville delega-tion, about 20 strong, left to catch a train. But over in one corner a dozen men of various opinions gathered about a big map and began arguing about the route. One man insisted that the road would have to go by Memphis, since it couldn't get across the Mississippi if it went by the south-ern route. This was a solar plexus to his opponents. All the time the western North Car-olina delegatos were looking dis-gruntled, and in the interim they gathered together and decided to have a convention of their own and take steps to complete the Central 'high-way. way.
