TELLS HOW IT FEELS TO BE "STUCK UP" Couldn't Drop Arms Even After Highwaymen Left.

This is an account of a saloon holiday by the bartender's visitor. We were discussing holdups—the bartender and myself. I never had faced the muzzle of a revolver in the hands of a determined man. The bartender had been held up three times. "It's an easy game if they keep their nerve," he was saying. "Now, look here. It's a quarter after 12 on a quiet night. There's no one on the streets and just me and you in here. If a couple of guys—"

And then they came in. I was leaning on the end of the bar, and they came in the side door. I seemed to know what they wanted just as soon as the door was opened. They looked just like any other ordinary men. So when the bartender said "What's yours?" and the short one said "Just put up your hands!" I was not surprised. I don't know whether the bartender was or not. He put his hands above his head.

Neither of the visitors paid the least attention to me, but I determined not to be left out of the game altogether, so my hands went up also. There was no real need of my doing it, I argued with myself, and, of course, if I wanted to I would put them down, but I didn't want to.

The taller of the two men stepped nimbly behind the bar and rifled the cash register. Then he went quickly out of the door, and the short man backed out after him, keeping the bartender covered until he reached the dark alley.

I stood still watching the place where he had disappeared. My face was hot, and there was a peculiar feeling in my throat. I felt light on my feet.

"You can take 'em down, now," said the bartender very calmly; I remembered then that my arms were still stretched above my head. I let them slide down, but I did not look at the bartender. I tried to speak, but something choked me. It was a swallow of beer I had taken into my mouth as the robber entered. I wiped my eyes, and the felt better. I began to get control of myself. I felt as if the blood in my veins had been stopped several hours.

"Why don't you call the police station?" chided the bar polisher. I hadn't thought of that.

"Are you sure they are gone?" I whispered. The bartender laughed and when I swore at him I knew I was all right again.—Kansas City Star.

Mrs. James L. Alexander has presented the High school with a handsome copy of this work.

Mrs. Cordelia Terrell entertained in Mrs. Astor's box, at the opera in New York, a few evenings ago for the following invited guests: Mrs. Whitney of New York, Miss Whitney of Boston, Mrs. Edward W. Robinson of

Two ministerial candidates named Adam and Low preached in a Scottish church. Mr. Low preached in the morning and took for his text, "Adam, where art thou?" He made a most excellent discourse, and the congregation was much edified. In the evening Mr. Adam preached and took for his text, "Lo, here I am!"
