KING GEORGE IN TROUBLE.

King George of England is a melancholy spectacle these days. The bold act of his reign—the calling of a mediation conference at Buckingham palace to settle the Ulster row—failed. Lords and Commons, Unionists and Liberals, Orange fire-eaters and resolute Irish home rulers, met and glowered at each other, and adjourned without settlement or promise of compromise.

And the poor king, to his great distress, is having his first bitter taste of criticism. His rather tactless remark to the effect that civil war was "on the tongues of the most conservative and responsible of my people" has fanned the flames of Liberal indignation.

If George V. were a King Arthur, his round table effort at conciliation at a critical moment in British history might have succeeded. But George V. is only George V. and in his thoughtful moments he probably realizes that British royalty has been rather thoroughly denatured.

As for the matter at issue, it now boils down to the question of what part of Ulster shall be excluded from the operation of the Home Rule Bill. There is really small difference of opinion between the two extremes, though passion makes it loom big. Sir Edward Carson and his armed followers are said to assent to the exclusion of six counties instead of the whole province, and John Redmond and his fellow Nationalists are willing to cut out four and take a test vote to decide the other two.

Praying for Gayety. Sickness is increasing in Berlin, and the German Emperor says the reason for it is the uncomprehending late hours kept by the Berliners. He suggests that if they would go to bed at night, instead of in the morning, Berlin would show as good a health rate as any other city.

The Boulevard Bank and Trust company, of Asheville, capital $1,000,000, subscribed by P. A. Gwyn and others for commercial banking and trust business.

Swallows. Swallows seem to be tireless. They have been seen at sea over a thousand miles from land.

tions of them as cultivate the bright lights—really have a good time; the laughter and song and dancing and conversation are genuine; whereas the sadness of Berlin's forced merriment has become a by-word. The Kaiser's plan to draw the world's gay, spendthrift tourists to Berlin has not been wholly a success.

And now nature herself calls a halt. The Emperor and the doctors find that drinking too much and sleeping too little has undermined the constitutions of the people of Berlin, rich and poor alike, so that they succumb easily to ailments that their forebears would have laughed at.

TRANSATLANTIC WIRELESS.

Some weeks ago a wireless operator on the roof of the Wanamaker building in New York stepped up to a telephone transmitter of a new type and said quietly: "Hello, Philadelphia, this is the New York store. Send over some stationery."

Then came assurance that within a year we shall be able to talk by wireless across the Atlantic. Testifying the other day before the wireless commission of the Canadian government, Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the Marconi company, declared that apparatus now in hand demonstrated that the distance of communication depends entirely on the power of the machine, and in a few months Mr. Marconi will have the equipment and power to telephone from Wales to New York.

This announcement is particularly impressive because all attempts to use trans-Atlantic cables as telephone wires have failed.

If within the present year man not only flies across the Atlantic but talks across it, 1914 will indeed be notable in history.

WALT MASON

CHRISTY MATHEWSON.

It's curving and twisty, the pitching of Christy, it bothers the artists who stand at the plate; the jol of fanny or pitches at random, he uses his brains and he keeps them on straight. The outlook is misty for men facing Christy, and teams hunting pennants get goose eggs instead; for Christy, the clincher, is student and thinker; he uses his fore-paw, and also his head. The blue ribbon's hisn—you see how he's risen—his fame has extended from Rutland to Rome; he is the Old Master, who judges disaster. Because when he's working he uses his dome, "Phnomas" we've a plenty; we've eighteen or twenty, each season, dispensing a big line of talk; but Christy, the clever, is with us forever, because he's the pitcher who uses his block. We can't all be pitchers, for some must be ditchers, and others be farmers—whatever our jobs, we're sure to be rising to summit surprising, if always, when working, we're using our knobs.

FARMERS LAYING BY THE CORN TOO EARLY

Demonstrator Anderson Says They Quit When Shallow Cultivation is Needed.

Special to The Gazette-News. Greensboro, July 29.—County Farm Demonstrator E. H. Anderson visited several sections of the county during the past week and found that the growing crops are beginning to suffer again from the drought.

To a reported Mr. Anderson said that practically all the farmers whom he visited are making the great mistake of laying by their corn too early. "They are quitting it," said Mr. Anderson, "right at the time it needs good shallow cultivation so as to form a dust which will conserve the moisture and allow the air to circulate through the top soil."

He found that the majority of the farmers had finished laying by their corn just before the last heavy rain and that now the soil is packed hard and tight and that moist dirt can not be found without digging down three or four inches in the soil. He said that it was a disheartening sight to see a beautiful field of corn, like he saw in several sections last week, literally dying away from the lack of proper cultivation, having already been ploughed for the last time even before the stalk is beginning to silk out.

A great many of the farmers he talked to complained that the work of plowing the corn when it has grown so high is to hot a job for both the men and the horses and that it ruins the rootlets of the stalk. But according to Mr. Anderson, though the plowing of corn at that stage is rather a warm job, yet it pays, and that instead of late cultivation injuring the stalk, shallow cultivation will add a great many barrels of corn in the crib that would otherwise be lost.

The late corn crop is in fairly good condition and a great stand was found on most of the farms, but the dry weather is beginning to show on the late corn also. Tobacco is good and has taken on a rapid growth. A great many fields of tobacco have been injured to no little extent by the hail of a few weeks ago, but for this exception the crop is a promising one and bids fair to make another great year in the sale of the seed.
