MORE TYPHOID IN THE RURAL STATES

Disease Increases in Direct Ratio to Distance from Larger Cities.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 4.—The danger of getting typhoid fever increases in direct ratio to the distance one travels away from the big cities, according to Dr. John S. Fulton, secretary of the board of health of Maryland, who addressed the American Public Health association here today. He called his discovery "the paradoxical relation of typhoid fever to population magnitudes."

Taking the typhoid records of 28 states, Dr. Fulton arranged them in order of their percentage of rural population, and found that the highest typhoid rates occurred in the least urban, or in other words, the most rural states. He also examined some 400 counties which had no cities as large as 10,000, and found that the less populous counties have the higher typhoid rates.

"Typhoid fever is a filth disease, everywhere and always caused by swallowing human filth," he said. "The chance of infection is greater under rural conditions, because the rural way of disposing human filth is to let it lie on the ground where it has the best chance of coming back into the human mouth as a contamination of food or drink. Under urban conditions, human filth is generally disposed of in less dangerous ways, and under the best urban conditions, is disposed of in a perfectly safe manner. It is therefore, a general rule in this country, that the chances of contracting typhoid fever are highest in the smallest communities, and lowest in the largest."

DURHAM TOBACCONISTS LOOKING FOR RECORD

Special to The Gazette-News.

Durham, Dec. 3.—Up to the present time the Durham tobacco market has sold approximately a half million pounds of tobacco, and the tobaccoists of the city believe that about half the crop is still to be sold. This would indicate that this market will sell more tobacco this year than it did last, despite the fact that there was a tremendous shortage of the crop in the sections from which the local market draws its trade.

mer has seen the folly of overproduction, but these lessons seem to have been soon forgotten. He has been urged to diversify, and raise enough wheat, corn, feedstuffs and meat for his own use. Under normal conditions we believe this season's cotton crop would have sold between 9 and 10 cents per pound as against about 13 cents last season when a medium sized crop was raised. Every form of business must accumulate a reserve to provide against a slack period or unexpected adverse conditions.

With the exception of the 1911 season when a very large cotton crop was raised, but for which a fair average price was realized, the cotton farmer has for the past five seasons received very high prices for his product. If he has not saved enough out of the earnings of these "fat years" to carry him through this "lean year," then it would seem he has been improvident and extravagant and the fact that he is now receiving a little less than the cost of production, may, after all, prove to him a blessing in disguise.

"Business with the mills was none too good before the war, and since has been extremely poor, but the mills are making the best of things. They have been running full time when possible, taking care of their employees, and making goods for a demand they feel confident will come sometime. It takes lots of confidence to do this.

"Our local section seems to have been especially fortunate. If it was not for what one hears and reads, we would hardly know that times were not normal. As an illustration one local mill is doubling the capacity of their plant. Those who have the courage to do things like this will reap the rewards when trade conditions become normal.

"Our own business shows an increase of 40 per cent over the same period last season, that is from August 1st until December 1st. It is gratifying to note that only a small portion of this increase was with New Zealand mills, the larger part being with our mills right here in North Carolina. More business might have been done with New England if we had had the time, but we have been too busy with the trade at home.

"Confidence is being restored rapidly we think the mills have passed through their hardest period, and everybody feels more optimistic, which after all is what really counts. The cotton farmer is being held by various plans to hold part of his cotton for better prices. The country is waking up to an appreciation of itself, and its resources, and we believe 1915 is going to be one of the best years in our history."
