COPENHAGEN IS MECCA FOR KAISER'S PEOPLE

Markets of Denmark's Notable City Filled With Merchants at Present Time.

Copenhagen, Dec. 25.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—This city is now the Mecca of Germans and the hotels are full of merchants, salesmen and others intent upon doing business with the neutral world, especially the United States.

The busiest office in town at present is that of the American Consul General and Mr. Winstow is doing his utmost to assist the exporters of America in the sale of their commodities. Exporters should bear in mind, said Mr. Winstow, that only necessities can be sold to Europe at the present time and no experiments will be made by Danish importers. Grain, cotton, flour, provisions, foot wear, clothing, canned goods, metals and all raw material will have the call.

The morning dead. The night smelted sweet, the breeze rustled, the stream murmured, and past me on the air the souls of the killed came marching. They seemed of one great company, no longer enemies. All had the same fixed stare, braving something strange, that they were trying terribly to push away. All had their eyes narrowed, yet fixed open, in their gray white, smoke grimed faces. They made no sound as they passed. Whence were they coming, where going, trailing the ghosts of guns, riding the ghosts of horses; into what river of oblivion, far from horror, and the savagery of man?—John Galsworthy in Scribner's Magazine.

Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream into your nostrils and let it penetrate through every air passage of your head, soothing and healing the inflamed, swollen mucous membrane and you get instant relief. Ah! how good it feels. Your nostrils are open, your head is clear, no more hawking, snuffing, blowing; no more headache, dryness or struggling for breath. Ely's Cream Balm is just what sufferers from head colds and catarrh need. It's a delight.

REIGN OF ATTILA

Barbaric Brutality of That Savage King of the Huns.

Attila was a barbarous king of the Huns who reigned from the year 434 to 453 of the Christian era, but he had no religion except that of brutality, conquest and loot. He ruled with all the weapons known in that day, and his hordes were compelled to follow him by the same means, as he had no mercy on any who showed the least lack of fealty to him or mercy to the conquered. For a considerable part of his reign it is said that his individual word was law over a vast territory extending from the Caspian sea to the river Rhine. As a leader he was fearless and masterful and savage. He called himself "the Scourge of God."

He ruled jointly with his brother for several years, but wanted no division of the spoils, and his royal brother was disposed of as others of the royalties of that region have been disposed of.

He founded the city of Buda, made it his capital and from it directed the slaying and looting wherever there was anything to get that was worth having. He laid waste in the most ruthless manner some of the finest and richest cities of what are now Greece, Italy, Spain, France and all the territory north of that, levying heavy tribute everywhere and burning and killing where tribute was not promptly paid. He conquered the powerful Byzantine emperor, Theodosius, in 448, destroying hundreds of gems of architecture and art, and compelled the emperor to pay to him the last money possible. He again laid waste all the eastern empires in 450 and then gave his attention to Gaul in the west with an army said to have been 700,000 strong, but this is thought by some historians to be an exaggeration. However, that army was strong enough to do its will in all that region. He then made an attempt by force and cunning to detach Theodoric, king of West Goths, from his alliance with the Romans under their general, Aetius; but, failing in that, he gave battle to the allies near Chalons, on the Catalonian fields, and there had his first real reverse.

The allies failed to follow up their victory, and the following year Attila and his savage hordes laid waste all northern Italy and had arranged for an assault on Rome, but he had just had an example of the prowess of the Roman soldiers and when he heard that they had concentrated there in great numbers he desisted.

Arduous campaigns and intemperate living had sapped his strength, and in 453, on the very night when he married Ildiko, a Burgundian princess, "the Scourge of God" was himself scourged into another world.

Extravagant. Clerk—Mr. Goldbug, as I am to marry I would like more salary. Boss—How much more do you want? Clerk—Ten dollars a week. Boss—My gracious! How many women are you going to marry?—Chicago News.

Two of a Kind. "A woman has to give up a great deal after she gets married," sighed Mrs. Gabb. "A man does nothing else but give up after he gets married," replied Mr. Gabb.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MAUDE ADAMS COMING IN LEGEND OF LEONORA

Fantastical Repertoire to Be Presented by Noted Artist in Asheville.

A particularly interesting event is the appearance of Maude Adams at the Auditorium on Monday night, January 11, when the actress is to be seen in a double bill of plays by J. M. Barrie. The chief play is "The Legend of Leonora," with which the bill will open and it will conclude with "The Ladies' Shakespeare." Miss Adams is always delightful and artistic. Her successes have been many and notable; but in "The Legend of Leonora," she is destined to exercise a greater sway over her following than she had an opportunity of doing in any of her plays since "The Little Minister." Of course, it is Leonora who is the heroine of the new comedy, and it is a wise Barrie who has drawn her. He knows that although the modern, practical woman with her votes, her clubs, and her executive boards may be professedly an object of admiration, it is the old-fashioned woman who is really loved. And so he creates Leonora in old-fashioned colors, makes of her a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

So whimsical and fantastic is the story that to recount it is to spoil it. A fond mother pushes a man off a railway car because he insisted on having the window open, and Leonora's little girl had a cold—on such an incident is the play built. The comedy opens at a dinner party where the shy guest is told that he is to meet seven women, the characteristics of each being described to him. While he is alone in comes Leonora and he endeavors to discover which of the seven she is. In a scene that is charmingly humorous he learns that Leonora is all seven and ever so many more rolled into one. Then for two acts Leonora is on trial for her rash act. Never were there such scenes in any court for Leonora turns it topsy-turvy. With absolute no concern she sits and knits, chats with the jurymen feeling that she was thoroughly justified in what she did for did not her little girl have a cold? Of course, she is declared not guilty of homicide after a scene in which there is a fleeting touch of pathos.

"The Ladies' Shakespeare" is a pretentious work in one act and containing three scenes. It is based on "The Taming of the Shrew," and Barrie has so edited it that it is as the ladies of today would have it with Petruchio instead of Katherine being the tamed one. The play is most elaborately staged and has a cast of twenty-six people. The company surrounding Miss Adams is made up of prominent players.

Cut Glass certainly does look very festive, about look very festive, about a charm to the spirit of the dining table. Did you ever notice how much more life and clearness of color the Libbey Cut Glass has than most other makes? I bought at Field's a beautiful Libbey made water pitcher, cut by hand in the new intaglio style of cutting. The flowers, leaves and stems of the graceful design are deeply cut and finished with satin glaze, which produces a crystal effect that looks as pure as a beautiful gem. With this pitcher is a Sheffield Tray fourteen inches in diameter, with pretty grape border that is raised above the surface of the tray and finished satin to match the design of the pitcher. Thus my friend will have ice water in a bouquet of everlasting flowers, surrounded by an arbor of grape vines and grapes. COUSIN MARY. Cut Glass and Sheffield Plate, of high grade, are now quite inexpensive, comparatively speaking, but very satisfying for dining room service or festive occasions. (A very practical gift).
