SNEEZERS MEET IN WAYNESVILLE

One of Five Places in Unieed States Where Hay Fever Stops.

North Carolina this year for the first time in several decades will entertain a convention of "Sneezers," the same to be a large body of those unfortunate who ro through the latter portion of the summer in a state of tears and sneezes as a result of hay fever. On the summit of Mount Junaluska, 5,050 feet above the sea level is the place, and August 27 is the opening date.

North Carolina through the possession of this unique resort this year is proclaimed one of the five places in the United States where hay fever and it shows that every hay fever sufferer may be assured of not only relief but immunity from their burden. The annual report of the secretary of the American Hay Fever Association has recently been issued, and it shows that last season was completely immune from the disease during the sojourn on the heights of Junaluska, a record that is equalled by only a few places in the entire country, notably in the White mountains of New Hampshire.

It is expected that there will be several hundred of the visitors here this month to console each other in their affliction. The meeting, scheduled in being worked up by the officers of the national association, whose chief purpose is to get the sufferers to places of relief.

Officials of the Southern Railway company are taking the matter in charge with a view of giving wide publicity to the merit of the western North Carolina resort. It is estimated that there are over 100,000 people in this country who suffer from the effects of hay and rose fevers, and a majority of these endeavor to reach some place where life will be bearable during the siege of the attack. The time was when the sufferers convened in large numbers upon the summit of Roan mountain, this state, but years ago the hotel there burned and since that time the hay feverites have been turning their attention to the resorts of the White Mountains and the shore resorts of Michigan.
