People's Legal Friend

The Booze Fighter's Will

Q. Kindly tell me what effect intoxication has with reference to the legality of a will made by a person who is in the habit of using liquor. A. Intoxication or habitual drunkenness may or may not make a will invalid. If the excessive use of intoxicants has so weakened and im-paired the intellect that the person making the will is unable to com-prehend, in a reasonable manner, the nature of his act, the will cannot stand However, if one is not under the influence of intoxicating liquors at the time of making his will, the fact that he is addicted to the use of intoxicants will not destroy the validity of the will, provided it ap-pears that he understood what he was doing and provided the ordinary tests of testamentary capacity may be successfully applied.

Weights And Measures

Q. Please inform me whether weights and measures may be requlated by means of a state lawf Does a state legislature have the power to laws providing for the inspection and regulation of weights and measurest A. No.

A Constitutional Enactment

Q. If a state law should empower a railroad company to borrow money and pay more than the legal rate of interest, would it be a constitutional enactment?

A. Some statutes of this character have been sustained.

The Man Who Takes Advice

In other words, the man who lets someone else think for him. "I've decided to buy that stock. Jones says it's a good thing," he tells his wife. He has let his own judgment rest while Jenes's judgment supported it. The stock turns out a "good thing," and never in this world would it be possible to convince that man that it would have been better not to it would have been better not to have acted on Jones's suggestion better in the long run. A strong judgment is better than a few extra dollars in the purse. And strength of judgment, like strength of muscle, comes only through ex-ercise. ### The Girl Who Waits For

"Yea, I love Tom," she admits, unhappily, "but not enough to marry him. How could I, when I can't wholly respect him? Hewell, everybody knows it!—he isn't a success at his profession. Men smile when they speak of him. I couldn't marry a man who might turn out a joke." No. And it's lucky for Tom that she can't. He'd be sure to turn out a joke, then—with a wife who didn't believe in him. Real love contains a protective quality. Is the husband unsuccessful? Then the more the wife tells the world of her pride in him. Does he stumble? Then the more she assures him of her faith in him. The girl who waits for the prince will never find him. For he comes in disguise. Though not able to boast of perfection herself, ahe, nevertheless, demands a perfect mate. She's trying to pass a dutton for a gold piece. The Prince
