Swannanova and Riceville broke even, three of the six best spellers being from each school. The winners in this contest will represent this section in the county commencement at Blount next Saturday. One of the pleasant features of the day was an educational address by Rev. Dr. Grooves, pastor of the Riceville Presbyterian church. At the close of the exercises an old-fashioned spelling match was held in the sixteen pupils who took part in the school contest being pitted against a like number chosen from the audience. The former carried off the honors by a small margin. The day was a perfect one and the visitors were loud in their praise of the hospitality accorded them by the Riceville school and citizens.

PLANS MADE TO SELL

OVER 3,000,000 SEALS

North Carolina Is Requested "To Make, To Save, To The Fund"

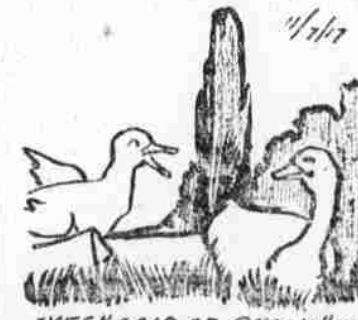

The officials of the state board of health are preparing for the great drive that will be made in this state for the sale of Red Cross seals this year. To sell three times as many seals as last year, is the plan of the board, in order to meet the great demand for funds to carry on the great fight against tuberculosis, which will be made this winter by the National Red Cross and National Tuberculosis associations.

It is estimated from the experience of France and other warring nations that war more than triples the amount of tuberculosis unless adequate provision has been made against it. It is this precaution and measures of prevention that these agencies are endeavoring to take.

Three million dollars is the amount expected from the sale of seals this year. This requires that every agency work to make results three times as large as those last year. North Carolina will be expected to raise near $1,000,000 as her proportionate part. Last year the value of the seals was $12,063. The year before it was $8,033.

In the Red Cross Seal campaign this year the mail sale plan will be largely adopted. The three-cent postage rate will not seriously affect the plan as first-class letters mailed for local delivery within the territory of the post office where they are mailed will be delivered by city and rural carriers for two-cent postage. Arrangements can be made to send letters in bulk to local representatives of various postoffices to be mailed. The plan may require more agents working in the fight against tuberculosis but so much greater will be the re-

THE SANDMAN STORY For Tonight

How Mr. Rat Was Caught. (Part I)

Mr. Rat was not caught in a trap. Oh, no indeed. He was caught in a very different way, for Mr. Rat was sly and clever and no trap ever attracted him, no matter what the bait was.

But Mr. Rat was a thief. I hate to use that word about Mr. Rat, but there is no other that can be used about this bad habit of Mr. Rat's.

Old Madam Quack and her husband, Dr. Quack, lived all alone in a little house by the duck pond, and everybody knew—that is, the ducks and other fowl that lived around the barnyard and pond—that Madam Quack was the very best housekeeper for miles around.

Her floors were scrubbed as white as soap and water could make them, and her stove was so shiny as it could be rubbed.

Her beds were the softest and it was whispered about that she even went so far as to make her feather beds of the feathers of her dear departed relatives; but no one could swear to the truth of that and no one dared tell Madam Quack her own even hint of it, so no one really knew.

But aside from all that Madam Quack was the very best cook for miles about as well, her flaky pie crust was the talk of her friends and her cake was so light that it had to be kept in a box with a cover, so that it would not fly away, so some said. Madam Quack kept on hand always a plentiful supply of jam and jelly and cheese cakes, so that if anyone in the stove because I heard Dr. could go away and say Madam Quack did not have anything in the way of refreshments to offer them.

In the attic Madam Quack had strings upon strings of dried apples and dried sweet corn and peas and beans; in fact, there was no one, as I told you, for miles around that kept the house that Madam Quack did, both in neatness and the way of food. One morning Madam Quack and Dr. Quack started for town. A new bonnet and shawl Madam Quack was bent upon buying, and she persuaded the doctor to go along to tell her if it was becoming.

Not that she cared in the least what the doctor thought. She would get the bonnet and shawl she liked best, but she wanted the doctor to go along to pay for it, and it was better to put it in that way than to ask Dr. Quack right out for the money.

You see, Madam Quack was wise, as well as being a good housekeeper. "Did you put down the pantry window and fasten it?" asked Madam Quack, as she locked the door and put the key in her pocket.

"Yes," said Dr. Quack, "and I locked the collar door and closed the damper of the stove, too."

"You never can tell where that thief, Mr. Rat, is these days; he can squeeze in through a crack."

Mr. Rat from his hiding place under the steps laughed as he heard this. "You are right, Madam Quack," he said to himself, "but the trouble is with your house you keep it so well in repair I can never find a crack through which I can squeeze."

Mr. Rat peered out and saw Madam Quack and her husband waddle out of sight and then he came out of his hiding place and walked around the house.

"They locked the doors and closed and fastened the pantry window," he said, "so there is no need of wasting my time or strength there. There is the chimney, but I know there is a fire there, so I won't touch that."

There stood little Johnnie Frog Quack, tell his wife he closed the damper. Now, how in the world shall I get in that house?"

Mr. Rat ran up the side of the house and went on the roof. He looked down the chimney and saw a little ray of light. "Oh, oh! There is a fire-place in the attic," he said. "I can run down the chimney and crawl into the attic, and the rest is easy."

So saying, Mr. Rat ran down the side of the chimney and into the attic, and if he had kept on and not stopped there this wouldn't have been much of a story; but he did stop, for just as he was running across the attic to the stairs he saw something that he liked very much and he went back.
