UNDER BARRAGE FIRE

With the American Army in France, Nov 15 (By the Associated Press).— Senators Kenyon, of Iowa, and Ken-drick, of Wyoming, today saw Ameri-can battalions practising an attack behind barrage fire and also witnessed the work of machine guns, trench mortars, hand and rifle greinades, bayonets and direct artillery firing. Both senators agreed that the American soldiers were doing splendidly and that their training has progressed more rapidly than seemed possible. They later left for Paris from where they will go to the French front.

be back in 10 minutes."
"I think I can go in five," replied

Humpy, and off he started.

It was only two blocks to the grocery and it was too short a walk for Humpy. He went down the street five blocks looking for dogs, goats and boys, and then turned and walked four blocks more. He was going to make for the grocery, but there was a red flag out on a building, and he saw that an auction was going on. An auction is as good as a circus for a boy, and he made his way in, and the cake of yeast was forgotten. The auctioneer had sold many and asked; things, and, an hour had passed away, when a big bass drum was put up for bidding. Three or four "No men had made their bids, when a plied. man, who stood beside Humpy, said

"I want that drum for a brass band, but I live a mile away, and do not want to carry it through the streets myself. If I will buy the drum, can I get you to take it home for me? I will give you 10 cents, and you can have pounding it as you go along."

It was the greatest temptation that could have been offered a boy, and the man bid high enough to get the drum. It was tightened up and made ready for a beating, and then he gave Humpy his address and fastened the drum to his chest and saw him set The drum seemed to stick out in front of the boy like a big bay window on a doll's cottage, and Humpy could not see the sidewalk within five or six feet of his toes. When he got out on to the street he began running into pedestrians the first thing, and, when he had bumped a policeman off the sidewalk he was told:
"You blamed, infernal boy! What are you doing with that department store hung in front of you!" "I am carrying home a drum," answered Humpy.

"Well, if you are going to carry that thing through the streets you'll find lots of trouble before you get there. You had better get on to a side street as soon as possible, and you'd better take the middle of the road if you can. It must have been a fool who got you to carry that drum!"

Humpy took a side street after running into three more persons, and he also began beating the drum. Tumlum-tum it went, and the people on the sidewalk looked in vain for the rest of the band. Humpy was not the only boy in that town. By several thousands they heard that tum-tum-tum for a mile off, and they came running to see what was up. There was soon a procession nearly a block long behind the drum, and it wasn't very long before a policeman ran out from the sidewalk and grabbed the boy and the drum at the same time, and demanded:

What sort of fooling is this! Where are you going with this drum?" 'I'm taking it home for a man who bought it at auction," was Humpy's

"Well, you take it off your neck and carry it in your hands or I will take you and the drum to the stationhouse! You ought to know better than to get people all excited!"

The drum was removed, but Humpy sould not carry it in his hands. Of course, 200 boys volunteered to help him, and one was accordingly chosen. There was no beating until they had gone half a block and turned a corner. Humpy heat with one stick and the boy with the other. They passed horses, and the horses stood on their hind feet and pawed the air. passed house after house and stores and shops, and everybody came out and demanded to knew what was up. Most of them took it as a funeral, and there was a constant demand to know who was dead. At length the drum had to take to the sidewalk to avoid some repairs in the street, and here the mob rested for a moment. There was an old woman with a cat in her arms coming along, and she walked up to Humpy
