ALLEGED BLOCKADER CAUGHT WITH DRESS ON

Pleads Guilty in U. S. Court

Most of the morning session of District court was taken up with the trial of Quill Moore and Bert Mashburn, both of Graham county, indicted for alleged activities in moonshining. At noon Judge Boyd gave the case as to Mashburn to the jury, Moore having entered a plea of submission through his attorney. Moore was given a year and a day in jail and $100 line; his prison term begins February 2. Perhaps one reason why Moore made no more vigorous effort to de-fend himself from the charge of block-ading is the fort that when he was ading is the fact that when he was arrested by revenue officers he had discarded the ordinary costume of man and wore a dress that he probably trusted to help him prove an alibi, at least if he was seen only from a distance. The still was found about 125 yards from Quill's house, according to the witnesses who were Division Deputy Collectorr J. S. Robinson, Sheriff Carringer of Swain county, and Deputy Sheriff Penland. It is considered more than probable that Quill didn't want to attempt to explain on the witness stand to Judge Boyd why he wore a dress that day.

Mashburn claims that he knew nothing about the still; he had been invited to go up and have a drink of beer and was there when the officers made the raid which captured him and Moore.

Sheriff Carringer is a terror to blockaders in the western counties, and his friends do not hesitate to say that he is the best sheriff in North

POLICEMEN APPRECIATE PUBLIC'S CO-OPERATION

Themselves Cheerfully to Rules for Their Safety

fort to teach the Asheville people to walk the white lines at street cross-ings in the business section, Police Chief John A. Lyerly today expressed appreciation for the courtesy and con-sideration with which a large majority of the people have received the new egulations.

There have been a few, only a few, people who have resented what they termed an abrogation of their rights as citizens on the highways, but for the most part the public is co-operat-ing with the department of public safety in its plans to safeguard life rules for pedestrians.

In laying off the crossings in white lines the department of public safety is following the example of approximately 100 cities that have found this plan necessary and satisfactory. The steady increase of traffic in cities has made such regulations imperative and the police department believes that Asheville people will soon become ac-customed to what was considered by a "wilful few" as drastic interference with personal liberty.
