Mischief Makers.

Oh! could there in this world be found Some little spot of happy ground, Without the village tattling! How doubly blest that spot would be Where all might dwell in liberty, Free from the bitter misery; Of gossips' endless prattling.

If such a spot were really known, Dame peace might call it as her own, And in it she might fix her throne. Forever and forever; There, like a queen might reign and live While every one would soon forgive

The little slights they might receive, ... And be offended never. Tis mischief-makers that remove Far from our hearts the warmest love: And lead us all to disapprove

What gives another pleasure; They seem to take one's part-but whe They've heard our cares, unkindly then They soon retail them o'er again, Mixed up with poisonous measure.

And then they've such a cunning way Of telling ill-meant tales; they say, "Don't mention it, I pray, I would not tell another!" Straight to your neighbors then they go

Narrating everything they know;

And break the peace of high and low, Wife, husband, friend and brother. Oh! that the mischief-making crew Were all reduced to one or two,

And they were painted red or blue, That every one might know them; Then would our villagers forget To rage and quarrel, fume and fret, And fall into an angry pet, With things so much below them.

For 'tis a sad degrading part, To make another's bosom smart, And plant a dagger in the heart, We ought to love, and cherish! Then let us evermore be found In quietness with all around, While friendship, joy and peace abound And angry feelings perish.

The French Government appeared to be desirous of embroiling them all in the East, with a view to get Tunis. All he wanted was a good understanding with the English, he cared nothing about the rest.— The British Minister said, "your majesty has forgotten Austria." The Emperor said, "when I speak of Russia, I speak of Austria as well: what suits the one suits the other; our interests as regards Turkey are perfectly identical." It was at this interview that the Emperor proposed the division of Turkey between Russia and Great Britain. "In the event of the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire, he thought it might be less difficult to arrive at a satisfactory territorial arrangement than was commonly believed. "The principalities are," he said, "in fact an independent State, under my protection; this might so continue. Servia might receive the same form of government. So again with Bulgaria. There seems to be no reason why this province should not form an independent State. As to Egypt, I quite understand the importance to England of that territory. I can then only say, that if, in the event of distribution of the Ottoman succession upon the fall of the Empire, you should take possession of Egypt, I shall have no objections to offer. I would say the same thing of Candia; that Island might suit you, and I do not know why it should not become an

English possession."

These disclosures were replied to by Lord. Clarendon, who said that the British Government would adhere to the principles in Lord John Russell's despatch; that England wanted no territorial aggrandizement, and could not be a party to a previous arrangement from which she was to derive no benefit. No secret understanding could be had which could be kept secret. This would be the signal for preparation for intrigues of every description, and for revolts among the Christian subjects of the Porte. Each power and each party would endeavor to secure its future interests, and the dissolution of the Turkish empire would be preceded by a state of anarchy which must aggravate every difficulty, if it did not render a peaceful solution of the question impossible. The Emperor, subsequently to the reception of this despatch, said that he felt the two Courts clearly understood each other, and that there was nothing he relied so confiwith the clear understanding, however, that the same rule of conduct shall be observed, One of the most remarkable and interesting | without distinction, and unanimously, by each
