Life in Nebraska.

Now that the Nebraska and Kansas Bill has become a Law, it may be interesting for our renders to accompany us to the territory itself, and see where and what it is, who inhabit it, or Life in Nebraska:

In visiting this unorganized territory, about which there has been so much dispute, we must first go by any route we choose to the city of St. Louis. Here we will take a steamboat and float for hundreds of miles to the month of Kunsas river. We land here and are in the region of Nebraska. If we were pleased to take another sleamboat, we could go up the Kansas river, or nearly West, towards the interior.

Delawares, Stockbridges, &c.; here are the wild and warlike Sioux and Chevenne Indians, that delight in scenes of blood; here room the Mandans, the Crows and Blackfoots, the Assinbones, the Aricares, and the Gros Ventres. Our civilization has driven them beyond the Mississippi, and soon another wave of civilization will push them westward, where it is expected that they will be fitted to become a part of the body politic, and be duly represented in Congress, Hunting the buffido is the great pursuit of the wild Indians of Nebraska, and their greatest source of profit. Their skins they sell to the fur traders: but alas! the buffaloes are becoming scarce, under the influence of so many rifles nuned at them. What will they do when they are gone? the resident, if he has the skill to take it. All accounts agree that the prairies of this region are covered with the most beautiful flowers; on a clear day, the prospect is truly enchantingparadisincal. The rose is abundant there, as is the sun flower. A botanist accompanied Fremont med by the advance subscription, ($10,) will receive the sixth in both his expeditions, and in his book are given the scientific, as well as the popular names of multitudes of Nebraska plants.

This region is not heavily timbered; still, there are a large variety of trees, among which are the most that abound with ourselves. The cotton word tree is abundant upon the rivers.

The climate is very dry, and yet we hear of no complaints of drought. Fremont in giving an account of the weather, has recorded sixteen clear days in the summer in succession, which is a record-that could be hardly made of any New England weather.

Cut what is to be the future of Nebraska? If it teem with life now, it is the life of wild animals, wild Indians, wild flowers, wild vegetation of all kinds. There are reptiles in abundance, and musquitoes that the traveller has a powerful knowledge of. There are now magnificent rivers, oceans of unoccupied land, great deserts, a whole territory, a wide waste.

But all this is soon to be changed. Steamers are to fly over her waters, and the cars over her lands. Instead of the red men, shall be the white men, instead of the wild, domestic animals. The hum of the spindle shall be heard upon her waterfalls. From Nebraska shall spring Nebraska and Kansas, and from these, other States as good, we trust as Massachusetts, as New York and Ohio, and, we hope, as intelligent and as prosperous.
