The artists appear to us to have succeeded in catching only the physical outline, and not the sentiment of her most peculiar and disunctive style of beauty. We admit the merits of Winterhalter's portrait, but it has the coldness of the German school, and we can conceive what an incomparably finer presentment of such a face would have been given on the canvass by Reynolds. so distinctive a type is seen in female beauty as in the French Empress.

She belongs to one of the rerest of all styles, that of the Spanish blonde. Stamped by nature's impress, there is an unmistakeable evidence of blood in her refined and spiritual face. Extremely fair, with gentle blue eyes, and a charming natural color, the Empress Eugenie possesses the add tional charm of a most expressive mouth. The They will keep constantly on hand the best description classical elevation of her countenance reminds one of Italian and American Marble, and their articles will of the chiselled masterpieces of Grecian art. She has more, however, of the outward and visible signs of high Spanish race in the long and delicatey drawn features, and especially in her noble Castillian air, so remote from aught that is suggestive of vulgar associations. Nor are her voice and manner the least of her attractions. She can sustain dignity without losing affability, and in her courtesy there is none of the affected condescension that wounds more than wins. Her words, gestures and deportment are those of a noble lady, of an illustrious gentlewoman, formed to grace a throne and cast an additional lustre on her

"On Thursday, the heat of the weather and the prolonged exertion of receiving the acclamations of what we should call the levee of the Londoneers, gave rather the appearance of langor to the Empress. It is gratilying to know that her amiability is equal to her beauty; she is adored by her attendants; and the words, Elle est si bonne, . si aimable, are in the mouths of all who know her. We cannot close this notice of one so lafty in station, and so highly endowed, without recording that her Imperial Majesty's influence has been directed to rusing the tone and character of the Court of the Todleries."

The Artesian Well.

From the Paris correspondent of the Newark Inally Autertises we extract the following item of

One of the most extraordinary things in Paris, or indeed in the world, is the artes an well of Grenelle. It was begun in 1834, and finished 1541. It is bored in the centre of the Court of the Vibratoir, goes 1.700 feet into the bowels of the earth, and the column of water, nine inches in dismeter, tises in a copper tube one hundred and twelve feet above the surface. From this elevathat it descends by means of another tobe to the count, and is conducted to the reservoir at the Partheon, whence it is distributed for the use of the inhabitants. The temperature of the water is land, viz: constantly about 30 deg. Fahrenheit. It holds several salts in solution, among the rest iron, (which colors glass submitted to its action.) and such wells were mere examples of a j t of water having its head on some mountain or high table the outlet up the height of its head.

The force that drives a column of water up to an elevation of 18,600 feet, and with such great Manson, containing 130 acres, lying on McMichael's rapidity as to supply 3,400,000 gallons in 24 Creek. This place also contains some valuable bottom hours; the force that shows itself to be variable, and meadow land sametimes comparatively quiet, at others almost terrific in its violence, is thought to be volcanic, adjoining Mrs. wisson, Barnet and No. I cotton land. It and to result from expansion within the inner crust also has some bottom and upland of an excellent quality escape from an artificial valve in the immense for a small farm would be very desirable steam-boiler on whose surface we live.

When the well was first opened, and before the water was carried to its present height, vast quanresidents in the vicinity were greatly alarmed, thinking that the ground on which they lived was being gradually undermined by the action of the water, and that some day they would be engulfed. This notion has long censed to alarm them, as it is in showing the land to any person desirous of purchasevident that the augur has pierced through the tocky exterior into the very interior, the soft central mass of the earth, whence the detrius that frightened the Parisians proceeded, and not, as they ignorantly imagined, from just beneath their HEROISM OF A WIFE .- During the late dreadful tornado which passed over Mississippi, tearing up trees, blowing down houses and killing cattle, an accident occured near Paulding, in that State, which is worthy of record.

A young married couple were alone in the foresi, occupants of a new home, and distant two miles from the nearest neighbor. They had retired to rest, *nd were absorbed in slumber, when wailing through the primeval trees, and a fierce wind struck their house, tumbling the logs around and about them. Forth she went, in the midst of the lowling storm, the winds singing a requiem over he ruins they had caused, and the stately trees till crashing and crushing in their fall before the maipotence of the tempest. But she heeded not he danger; buoyed up by a strong affection, she noved onward, with an incarnation of heroism rack, and reached unharmed the residence of near eighbur. Assistance was procured, and her hus. and restored to as true a wife as ever hallowed with felicities the life of man.
