There is a little mystic clock, No human eye hath seen; That beateth on-and beateth on, From morning until e'en.

And when the soul is wrapped in sleep, And heareth not a sound, It ticks and ticks the livelong night, And never runneth down.

O wondrous is that work of art Which knells the passing hour, But art ne'er formed, nor mind conceived The life-clock's magic power.

Nor set in gold, nor deeked with gems, By wealth and pride possessed; But rich or poor, or high or low,

Each bears it in his breast, When life's deep stream, 'mid beds of flowers All still and softly glides, Like the wavelet's step, with a gentle beat,

When threatening darkness gathers o'er, And hope's bright visions flee, Like the sullen stroke of the muffled oar, It beateth heavily.

It warns of passing tides.

When passion nerves the warrior's arm For deeds of hate and wrong, Though heeded not the fearful sound, The knell is deep and strong.

Such is the clock that measures life, Of flesh and spirit blended; And thus 'twill run within the breast, Till that strange life is ended.

FATTENING ANIMALS. From the Farmer's Horticultural Gazette

There are certain principles which apply to the feeding of all animals, which we will briefly notice:

well bred animal not only affords less waste, but has the meat in the right places, the fibre is tender and juicy and the fat is put on just where it is wanted. Compare the hind-leg of a full blooded Durham ox, and a common one. The bone at the base of the tail extends much further in the former, affording more room for flesh, and the thigh swells out, of convex or circular shape;

while in the common ox it falls in, dishing and hollow. Now the round is the most valuable cut, and is only found in perfection in high-bred stock. The same is the case over the whole body. So well do Eastern butchers understand this that their prices are regulated by the breed, even where two animals are equally fat. They know that in a Durham or Hereford ox, not only will there be less offal in proportion to weight, but the greatest quantity of meat will be where it brings the highest price when retailed, and will be of a richer flavor and more tender fibre. The same is the 25 The Philadelphia Sun, which has case with hogs. A large hog may chance a rare eve for "queer bits," gives the follow- to make more ment on a given quantity of ing as a warning specimen of what a reporter | food than a small one, but the meat of the first will be course and tasteless compared with the other; and in the East, flavor and tenderness greatly regulate prices. Consequently moderate sized, short-legged small Welch and Scotch mutton; but the great | SOUTH ATLANTIC WHARF, An old fellow who became weary consumers, the mechanics, preferred large towards breeds maturing early, with comwriters, the large Leicester and Cotswolds are going quite out of fashion. When we give three thousand dollars for a Durham bull it is not that his progeny are "intrinsically" more valuable to that amount, but the increased value and the fashion together make up the difference. And it is thus that while Durhams and Herefords are preferred for ships and packing, Devons are high in 'I know, your honor,' said the applicant, repute for private families. The joints are ness, probably found in no other kind of stock; and the proportionate waste is said | Formerly of York to be less than in any other breed. Thus in the Lordon market, the Kyloes, and then the Devons, (the former even smaller than the latter,) brings the highest price, because preferred by the aristocracy. So in Dublin, spayed heifers are sought for. But the breed also regulates the profit. There is nothing more certain than that one kind of animal will fatten to a given point on much less food than another; and as fattening our stock is only another mode of selling our preferred which come to maturity soonest, and fatten on the least food. The differ-three winters, others are full grown and fattened at ten months old; and the difference in profits is enormous. We cannot go into particulars, but the following rules may be considered as applying to all. An animal may be expected to fatten easily when it has fine bone, and fine soft elastic skin, with thin or silky hair: the head and legs short, the "barrel" large, but chest and lungs small; and when it is quiet, sleepy to take care of children, can have my sar- and easy in temper. An unquiet, restless, quicktempered animal is generally a bad feeder, and unprofitable. 2. Much depends in fattening on outward and mechanical management. Fat is carbon, or the coal which supplies the body with heat. If we are exposed to cold, it is burnt throwing up his chin and taking an extra up in our lungs as fast as it is deposited by breath of wind, sings out in a double octavo the blood; but if we are kept warm by shelter or clothing, it is deposited through out the body, as a supply on hand when needed. Warm stables and pens are a great assistance in fattening, and should never be neglected. So, also, quiet and peaceful-'I hope,' said Supple, 'no poor man has ness are important. Every excited action found it, for it would ruin him in a week.' consumes some part of the body which has all necessary out buildings are there in good to be supplied by the food, and detracts from repair. The Rail Road that will run from the fat, In the climate of Michigan, warm stables, regular feeding at fixed hours, and kind treatment, with perfect cleanliness, time she keeps you waiting whilst dressing | 3. Ground and cooked food fatten much more profitably than raw food. Mr. Ells-A Western Editor declares that some worth found that bogs made as much flesh or to the undersigned, Shelby, N. 4. A change of food helps in fattening. Thus, an ox fed entirely on corn and hay will not fatten as fast or as well as one which has roots, pumpkins, ground oats or buck-wheat, &c., fed to it at regular periods. A lady was asked to join one of The latter may contain intrinsically less the divisions of the Daughters of Temper- nourishing matter than the corn, but the ance. She replied, "it is unnecessary, as it | change produces some unknown effect on is my intention to join one of the sons in the stomach and system, that adds to the capability of depositing fut. The best feeders change the food very frequently, and find that they make a decided profit by so doing. Salt should be given with every meal to cattle-say an ounce a day. are subject. This torpor, or disease, is, to a certain extent, conducive to fat; but carried too far the animal sinks under it.

5. In cattle the skin should be particularly attended to. A fat animal is in an unnatural disease. Taking no exercise, it has not its usual power of throwing off poisons out of the system; and if the skin is foul, the whole labor is thrown on the kidneys. It is found by experience that oxen, regularly curried and cleaned daily, fatten better and faster than when left to themselves; and if the legs are pasted with dung, as is too often the case, it seriously injures the 1. The breed is of great importance. A

6. Too much rich food is injurious, The stomach can only assimilate a certain quantity at once. Thus an ox will prosper better on thirty pounds of corn and thirty pounds of cob ground together daily, than on forty pounds of ground corn. These mixtures are also valuable and saving of cost for hogs when first put in the pen. If an animal loses its appetite, the food should at once be changed, and, if possible, roots, pumpkins, or steamed hay may be given.

7. Oxen will fatten better if the hay or stalks are cut for them, but care must be taken not to cut too short. An inch in length is about the right size for oxen, half or three-quarters of an inch for horses.

FLORIDA LAND AGENCY THE undersigned has established an agency in the town of Alligator, Columbia County, Fla., for the purchase, sale or location of Land Warrants, the purchase and sale of lands generally, improved and unimproved. The fact now being established that a Rail Road is to be constructed immediately connecting the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico, running through the entire length of the county, East and West, and in view of the great fertility of our soil, the unusually fine growth of pine timber on the land, the healthfulness of the climate, and the reasonable terms on which lands can now be obtained, there is perhaps no section of the Union which affords equal inducements to the emigrant from the olde States. Having had some experience in farm. ing on the different kinds of land, and acquired a general knowledge of them through. out the county, and having acquired unusual facilities for pointing out such as are for sale either of public or private lands, he feels very confident of making it the interest of all persons wishing information, or who may have deter mined to settle in Florida to call
