I feel most confoundedly blue, Life's rose is turned into thistle; My sweetheart has turned out untrue, And sacked me, as slick as a whistle

Though lively and keen as a rat. And playful as any young kitten, She has got the sharp claws of a cat, And showed 'em to me through the mitten

Of our yillage girls she is the belle .-As plump as a partridge she grows-Her lips for two cherries would sell -Her cheeks are as red as a rose.

Like two bran new dollars her eyes-Her figure is neater than wax-In beauty, with Venus she vies-Her hair-it is finer than flax.

I courted her day after day, Expecting a wedding to follow; Alas! for my love thrown away-Her heart, like a pumpkin, was hollow!

As thin as a hatchet I've grown, And as poor as Job's Turkey, by golly! I stand like a scarecrow, alone, A victim to love's melancholy

HARVESTING CORN.

Hints for the Season. From present appearances and the best information within our reach, we think it may be pretty safely predicted that over a wide range of our country this is not destined to be a great corn year. A large part of the growing corn is too late to fully mature, unless we have an unusually warm September and October, a circumstance hardly to be expected. Therefore it will probably be the safer course for most farmers to cut up and shock their corn as soon as it will any way answer-that is, if it can be done before receiving much injury from frost; by so doing they may save much in the value of fodder, and much corn nearly rained by frost.

We have several times seen corn cut up, and tied in moderately sized bundles and slung across poles over the barn floor, where it has dried perfectly, and the folder was much better than it would have been had it been shocked in the field. We have seen various methods of shocking corn in the field. Some put a dozen large bundles into a shock; such large stacks do not dry well. Others cut and stand it round a hill purposely left uncut. We have seen corn very safely stacked by only using five bundles to the shock-one in the centre, straw was tightly tied around the whole some four feet from the ground, and the tops of the stalks bent over and tied down. Such shocks stand better than larger ones, and also dry much better.

Corn, when harvested before properly ripened, and dried in the field, as much of it probably will be the coming harvest, is sometimes injured when stored in large quantities in the crib or the slatted corn house. If dry, windy weather follows after the corn has been cribbed or housed, it Black leather varnish, generally dries well, but if long continued damp or rainy weather succeeds, the corn is very liable to heat and mould, &c., injuring its mealing qualities. To guard against such a loss, we have known farmers to have a tight box stove in the corn houses, and then kept up a brisk fire a portion of the time during the damp weather, thereby drying their corn very fast, and saving it from injury.

The labor of manuring, ploughing, planting and hocing an acre of corn is no trifling job in many situations of the country, and it should be the aim of the farmer to make the most of his labor, and not cheat himself out of a portion of his work by suffering his corn or corn fodder to be injured or wasted through negligence or lack of care on his

The following extract will awaken with most but a smile at so curious an incident; it has, however, caused us to reflect on the various viscissitudes in life, how many now basking in the smile of fortune and anticipating a bright and happy future, may ere long be as suddenly crushed by some unexpected misfortune; how many, too, there are who, discontented with their lot, fling from them in thoughtless mood that which in a few months they will bitterly lament. At this time we know a lady who, but few short weeks since was enjoying domestic felicity, but who is now allowing her proud, imperious will to blight all prospect of happiness, entailing on hersalf, husband and children a melancholy future.

Patient forbearance is an essential virture in the married state: During the troubles in the reign of Charles I, a country girl came to London in search of a place as a servant maid, but not succeedig she hired herself to carry out beer from a warehouse, and was one of those called tub-women. The brewer observing a good-looking girl in this low occupation, took her into his family as a servant, and after a short time married her. He died while she was yet a young woman and left her the bulk of his fortune. The business of brewing dropped, and Mr. Hyde was recommended to the young woman as a skillful lawyer to arrange her hunband's affairs. Hyde who was afterward Earl of Clarendon, finding the widow's fortune considerable, married her. By this marriage there was no other issue than a daughter. who was afterward the wife of James II and mother of Mary and Anne, Queens of Eng-

DESTRUCTION OF TREES,-Most provoking. ndeed, is the national tendency to the destruction of fine trees on the most frivolous pretences. A fine, majestic elm will be cut lown because the dripping of its boughs moistens clean shingles on some adjoining house; an oak which projects two feet into the road will be sacrifised rather than a dollar spent to widen the throughfare. Trees in a village must disappear, root and branch, rather than have a new street deviate from a straight line. The first care of a purchaser of an estate dis to cut down all the trees that do not stand in regular rows-and we are sometices called on to admire the thrift which cuts down an orchard because every tree from her hut-where "the sun could shine in nicely all day-looking so improvement like;" and there are every day instances of Vandalism not so excusable.
