For the Western Democrat. CHINESE SUGAR CANE.

MR YATES: Having read with eagerness myself all that I have seen in the papers in regard to the Chinese Sugar Cane, I presume that others will be glad to obtain all the information they can in regard to this, to the planter, important acquisition.

Like many others, I had none of the Cane planting or experimenting with it. I have some planted this year, and so far I have paid a good deal of attention to it, and I am now satisfied it is no humas it runs from the mill, to make one of sirup; but I would say if you wish to barrel it up, it should and would not run in winter; hence you could not draw it when needed. Out of twenty gallons of juice I made four gallons of the best sirup I ever saw. Some seem to think that only a very common quality of molasses can be made from this cane, which will do for our negroes, at least; but this is a mistake, for I consider that which I made. (and others who have seen it, hold the same opinion,) superior in taste and flavor to the best sugarsirup, made as it may be, from the Chinese Cane, cannot fail to please the taste of the most refined and fastidious.

If you want the sirup fair, or almost transparent, it must be boiled in a house, as boiling it in the open air darkens it. The best plan is to boil it down a little in large vessels, and then take it out and finish boiling in large flat ovens. By boiling a few pots full you can easily learn how to temper it-any person who has made molasses candy can tell when to stop the process, as it looks, when sufficiently concentrated, like molasses in the operation of candy making.

When the juice is first put to boil, to every ten gallons throw in a piece of carbonate of soda about the size of a partridge egg; this causes the gluten and albumen to rise to the top. It is of the utmost importance you should keep your beilers well skimmed during the whole operation, and after it is done be careful to skim off all the foam and froth before putting your sirup away, as this will form hard lumps in your vessels. The cane must be well ripe to make a good turn out of sirup to the juice;-when the seeds are nearly black and the stalk yellow, you may cut away, all is ready.

That sugar can be made from the Chinese Cane, I have no doubt; but even if we cannot make sugar, if the molasses is properly made it will answer all and yet he remembered to forget to inform his con- Judge, James Conner, U.S. District Attorney, appeals from our several pulpits, to a sense of their the purposes of sugar as a condiment, and for culinary purposes. For the benefit of any that wish to try the experiment of making sugar from the Chinese Cane, and are not acquainted with the usual process, I will give them all the information 1 have on the subject. The juice as it runs from the mill is immediately mixed with lime, in the proportion of one part lime to eight hundred of juice, and heated to 140 degrees Fahrenheit; this causes all the impurities to rise to the top and form a thick seum; all below this senm is usually drawn off by a cock into a copper boiler, (an ordinary pot will answer as well,) and the scum that rises to the top carefully skimmed off. Then concentrate the juice by ebulition and skim off the froth as it forms. When concentrated sufficiently, transfer to shallow vessels and let it partially cool; then put it into wooden vessels, (large wooden bowls would probably answer.) and let it stand twenty-four hours; then stir pretty rapidly with wooden stirrers in order to make the sugar granulate;-it will take from four to six hours to complete the operation. Have holes in the bottom of your wooden vessels, and have them temporarily plugged; after the operation of granulating is completed, pull out the plugs and let the molasses drain out, and your sugar will be left in the wooden vessels; it then has to be dried in the sun, &c. The purifying of sugar is an entirely different branch of business. If anything in this communication will be of benefit to any one they are welcome; and I would be glad to hear the experience of others through H. M. JENNINGS, the same channel. How TO PRESERVE BEAUTY .- Nothing is more becoming to a man or woman than a beautiful luxuriant head of hair, and a woman's beauty is certainly incomplete without a fair complexion, and he or she who neglects these great and important adoraments of nature must expect to suffer the mortification of prenn. ture baldness and a wrinkled face and a sallow skin. Nothing is necessary to preserve these essential attract tions but to use Prof Wood's Restorative .- Louisville Times.

Prof. Wood's Hair Restorative .- We have had occa sion to use this famous preparation of Prof. Wood's and after thoroughly testing its qualities we find that where the hair is thin it will restore it to its original color; likewise, it gives a glossy appearance, as well as keeps the hair from falling off. This invaluable ingredient is for sale at "Chinaman's Tea Store," south-east Given .- Baltimore Clipper.
