every way and to the last extremity was greater then than it is at the present moment. Then every man who could bear arms was a soldier, and took his place in some division or other of the army en masse, whilst even the elder boys were attached to the wagon train to convey the women and children and infirm old men to a place of security. At this time there is a uniform desire throughout England to establish everywhere volunteer rifle corps, and the youth of England are entering with alacrity and zeal into the duty of taking part in the national defence.

BOT The Placerville (Cal.) Observer thus accounts for the sudden death of an Indian of the Digger tribe who recently departed for the spirit land:

A modern philosopher gives several potent reasons why a man should never marry for money; but an old epigrammatist argues the case very pleasantly on the other side:

Whene'er you marry, Crossus said, Take a rich widow or rich maid; For any wife may turn out ill, But 'gad ! the money never will !

In the first place, make up your mind to ac complish whatever you undertake; decide upon some particular employment and persevere in it. All difficulties are overcome by dilligence and asinles. last. It was Field who saw it stowed away in the vast bowels of the Niagara; Field who saw it uncoiled in the mid-night storm, and with the first peep of being of his beloved wires. Morse only invented it, as he did lightning, thunder, and all the other phenomena of Nature. Field put the thing in operation, and there was no happier being in existence than Cyrus, when the last link was fastened to the American shore, and the ears of the New World heard through that mysterious medium the roar of life and intelligence in the streets of London. If Field had died in that blissful moment, he would have been saved a degree of humiliation as intense as his triumph. If his friends had behaved with becoming delicacy, and left him to that dignified retirement so congenial to his stay and sensitive soul, he would even then have been spared all sensation of chagrin and every painful emotion, except that which all connected with the enterprise have suffered from the abortion of a magnificent scheme. But this the besotted populace of the great cities would not permit. They determined to make a demigod of the exemplary Field. They put him in an open carriage in Broadway, and caused him to ride down the whole length of that magnificent thoroughfare amid the shouts and plaudits of an immense multitude. They even compelled him to stand up in the carriage, that the thronging populace might peruse accurately every lineament of his respectable countenance. They paraded his likeness in the newspapers, and gave long biographical sketches of Cyrus W. Field, and of all his relatives. They feasted and toasted him in splendid banquets, and made him the subject of excellent sermons. No one imagined at the time that Field was an involuntary victim at the shrine of popular enthusiasm; that he was garlauded against his will for the sacrifice, and led, like an unwilling ox, to the slaughter. Such, hawever, it now appears, was undoubtedly the case. A recent publication insists that all these horrors were forced upon Field, but he uttered no word of complaint at the time; he bore his excruciating notoriety with the fortitude of an Indian, he even smiled serenely amid his torture, and hugged the blazing faggots of glory which consumed his soul.

A project has been renewed in England to revive the Atlantic Telegraph, but, with the experience of the past yet fresh in its recollection. the public cannot be sanguine of success. At all events, the people of the United States have no interest in a project which, in time of war, would give Great Britain an incalculable advantage over this country. In the event of a war with that American possession. A direct line between the United States and England, would be a different affair, but such a project does not appear to be at present in contemplation.

THE METHODISTS AHEAD .- The spire has been completed on the beantiful new Methodist Church, corner of Fourth Avenue and Twenty-Second Street, New York. On last Saturday evening the climax to the structure was capped. It is the highest spire in New York. The finishing stone is described as a solid block of marble, octagonal in shape and tapering in graceful curves to a sharp point. On each side are rudely cut the initials of several of the prominent men connected
