ON CURING TOBACCO YELLOW. Tobacco should be very ripe when cut. In order to cure a fancy crop, it is necessary to select your tobacco as you cut it, in order to get a house full as uniform as possible of plants that ripen a yellow color. I put my tobacco in the house as soon as possible after cutting it, putting six to eight plants on a stick four and a half feet long, lacing the sticks at a distance on the tier polls, so that the tobacco will not touch after it is hung in the house. Commence firing immediately with coal, at 100 degrees Fahrenheit twenty-four nours-the next twelve hours 105, the next six nours 110, the next six hours 115-then increase 21, every hour until you attain 165, and remain at that degree until your tobacco is thoroughly cured. The stalk should be dry when you quit firing. As soon as your tobacco is soft enough to the argument from probability, which I did not move after it is cured, shove the sticks as close

PATRICK HENRY.

It has been common to suppose that Patrick called, was very slightly, if at all, indebted for his wonderful elequence to those sources of mental culture which are held in highest esteem as at once the models of taste and the instruments of learning. It seems, however, that this opinion is unfounded, and the American Demosthenes is no exception to the great law which affirms that "the gods give nothing to men without labor." From an interesting and instructive oration delivered by Mr Hugh Blair Grigsby, before the students of William and Mary College, on the 4th of July last, we cite the following statement in reference to the literary style and early classical proficiency of Patrick, Henry: One instance of the application of philology to the history of Virginia is within my own experience, and may not be without interest to the students of William and Mary. From a critical examination of the fragments of speeches and writings of Patrick Henry which have come down to us, and by a careful collation of them with those of his prominent cotemporaries, I was convinced that our Patriot Prophet had received a regular and thorough training in the Latin classics, and that he had received that training in early life. There was to be seen in his style a 'curiosa felicitas' and a 'callida junctura,' a purity and a tact which could not have been the result of chance, or they would have been equally apparent in the works of his rivals; and it was evident, so finely were these characters interwoven in the general texture of his style, that he must have studied the ancient authors in early life; as such results rarely appear so conspicuously in the productions of those who become acquainted with the classics at a more advanced age. This was the argument of internal evidence-an argument which was satisfactory to me, but which, without an infinitely minute expo sition of details that none but a philologist could Washington, Sept. 4 .- General Harney has comprehend, would not be conclusive to others. cated in that country when Latin was taught with substantial skill, but many years before the sun of Greek literature had risen in the Scottish horizon. Now, the Scotch teach Latin at the tenderest age. I am myself of Scottish descent on the maternal side, and was taught by Scottish teachers, and I can hardly remember a time when I could not read Latin, or at least when I was not familiar with the grammar. But the father of Henry was not only a teacher and a Scotchman, but he was an admirable Latin scholar; for we are told in the diary of Saml. Davies, himself a fine scholar, that the father of Henry was more familiar with his Horace than with his Bible. Hence the conclusion was irresistible that, if the father of Henry taught his pupils the classics, he would, like the rest of his countrymen, teach them early; and, as he was proved to have been thoroughly skilled in them, that he would teach them well; and, further, that if he taught the children of other people Latin, he would at the same time teach his own. This was need to enhance my own conviction but which may be necessary to gain the assent of others. Here, then, was a fact ascertained in the life of Patrick Henry which was not only not known, but which ran counter to the opinions and statements of all his cotemporaries and biographers. But was my conclusion true after all? It was strictly true in both respects, that our great orator had learned the Latin classics, and that he had learned them in early life; for in the recently published diary of John Adams, under the date of September, 1774, we have it from the lips of Henry himself that before fifteen he had read Virgil and Livy-a degree of proficiency which, even in this day, except under favorable auspices, is rarely attained at so early

WEEVILS IN GRAIN.

Remedy—Curing Bacon.

Before the corn is cribbed, the floor of the barn or crib should be covered over with green leaves and stems of the China tree, and then as the grain is put in the crib to the depth of a foot there should be another thin layer of leaves and stems, and at the depth of another foot another layer of leaves and stems, and so on, until the grain is all

I am sure this is a remody which requires no labor in comparison to its value; and the China tree is a growth to be found in almost every Southern State. I have tried this remedy for a number out. The weevil gets in the most of the Texas experience, and not mere rumor. All that is necessary, is while smoking your meat after it is hung up, occasionally throw on the fire a handful of either the leaves, stems, or berries, or a few of each, and keep this up for the ordinary length of time of smoking meat.

I will further remark, that this mode of smoking gives the meat no unpleasant taste. FIRST COTTON .- The first bale of new cotton
