It appears that a war party of the latter, consisting of twenty-two warriors and a Mexican captive, came upon two Utahs, one of whom they killed, but the other made his escape to the village, and gave the alarm. Women bear a sedentary life better than men; it is possible that they live longer in cities. Girls are even more ambitious of acquiring the polish and fashion or folly, or whatever it may be, of the city than young men. A large proportion of the young men who leave their rural homes go abroad as sailors and says: adventurers, and there die: while females, who cannot do this, simply resort to the city. The "social evil," as it is delicately called, does not drive a man who transgresses from the social circle, as it does a woman, and here again we have a very apparent cause of the disproportion of sexes in our cities. Yet all these causes are conjectures, wanting facts and figures to establish them. When the facts are known it will be possible for editors, legislators, and all others concerned, in directly ameliorating humanity, to speak and act with the certain- black-ball our boots; they whitewash theirs. MEAN MEN .- Rev. W. R. Alger preached, last Sunday, a discourse in Boston, on "Mean Men," of whom, we understand, there are a number of specimens in that city as well as others. The sermon was founded on the following text: "The mean man boweth down "-Isaiah ii, 9.

The reverend speaker divided mean men into 1. Aristocrats, who inherited wealth and position acquired by the industry of their ancestors, and who wished to appropriate all their resources to pampering themselves. 2. Beggars, who get a subsistance by wearying with the importunities, too mean to earn it then-
