

FULL PARTICULARS OF THE BATTLE OF NEWBERN.

From the Raleigh Journal. After considerable labor we are enabled to give our readers a pretty accurate account of the battle of Newbern...

THE SITUATION. Newbern, as is generally known, is situated at the confluence of the Neuse and Trent rivers, in the county of Craven...

ITS DEFENCES. The defenses of the town, constructed to repel the Northern invader, consisted of a series of open forts and batteries, extending down the west bank of the Neuse river...

OUR FORCES. In the works on the morning of the battle our forces were nearly as follows: The 27th, 600 men; the 37th, 600; Latham's battery, about 500...

THE BATTERIES. The forts and batteries were manned as follows: Union Point battery by the Confederate Minstrels commanded by their manager, C. O. White...

ARRIVAL OF THE FLEET. On Wednesday, 12th March, at 2 p. m. the signals established along the line of the river, announced the fleet to be six miles below Fisher's Landing...

THE BATTLE. Before daylight on the morning of Friday, the 14th, the pickets that had been sent out before dark on the previous evening, were driven in and reached the entrenchments firing, reporting that the enemy had landed during the night...

THE BATTLE (continued). The firing generally now ceased for some five or ten minutes, the Yankees again opening it with several pieces of artillery, upon the left division of the works...

THE BATTLE (continued). This is a truthful statement of this battle and is by no means highly colored. When the history of the present war comes to be written, the impartial historian will pass with an approving word over the deeds of the brave handful of the defenders of the indefensible town of Newbern...

THE BATTLE (continued). The scattered regiments of the enemy fall back to reform and fresh troops take their places. The fire on the centre now becomes hotter and thicker. The gallant Latham has already lost two men from his own little gun...

THE BATTLE (continued). The officers and men almost universally behaved admirably. Gen. Branch has won the respect and admiration of all who witnessed the coolness and collectedness with which he fought his first battle...

THE BATTLE (continued). The losses fell most heavily upon Col. Campbell's, Col. Avery's and Col. Vance's regiments—the chief loss of the latter being in the platoon commanded by Maj. Carmichael...

THE BATTLE (continued). We have the names of numbers reported to be killed in the several regiments. We put little reliance in these reports, and therefore decline to publish them...

collectedness with which he fought his first battle. Col. Campbell and Col. Lee added to their reputation considerably. Col. Haywood was the only officer who applied steel to the enemy...

The losses fell most heavily upon Col. Campbell's, Col. Avery's and Col. Vance's regiments—the chief loss of the latter being in the platoon commanded by Maj. Carmichael...

We have the names of numbers reported to be killed in the several regiments. We put little reliance in these reports, and therefore decline to publish them...

The losses in killed, wounded and missing seem to be about equal in Col. Campbell's and Col. Vance's regiments. Not more than three or four companies of Col. Vance's regiment were engaged...

Gov. Letcher has received the following statement: MARCH 26.—Gen. Johnston's army is between Mount Jackson and Woodstock in good condition, but Robertson and Holloway are wounded and prisoners...

Richmond, March 28.—A dispatch was received this evening by Gov. Letcher from Staunton, Va., saying that the enemy's total loss is two thousand in killed and wounded...

Col. Ashby has since had a little brush with the enemy and drove them back, killing twelve. It is stated that the enemy is advancing on Yorktown, and a battle is daily expected...

THE LATE BATTLE IN ARKANSAS. We get the following from the Memphis correspondence of the Savannah Republican. The details of the battle in Arkansas come slowly. It appears, much to the gratification of every one, that Gen. Price was not wounded...

There was some confusion in the first telegraphic accounts of the battle, owing to the statement that the Confederates had got in the rear of the Federals and were driving them Southward...

BURNING COTTON.—We learn on the best authority that Peyton Atkinson, Esq., of Pitt County, North Carolina, has already burned eight hundred bales of cotton on one of his plantations...

AN INCIDENT.—The Salem Press says, that at the recent draft in Forsyth county, "a man in feeble health, with a large family dependent upon his labor for a support, was drafted, when a youth stepped forward and nobly volunteered to take his place...
