Widows' Wicked Ways. From the Washington Gazette.

The marriageable widow passes through to the widow's cap-period. This is an eminently interesting epoch. The dainty ruche composition will be quickened into active operation. And now the marriageable widow begins to look about her, and to feel a little frisky. Her heart, of course, is buried never to be resurrected-never! But, then, she sensibly argues that what is left of her might as well be made as comfortable as is practically possible. Among other comforts, she furtively admits that beaux to a limited extent are not undesirable. Beaux, mind you-not lovers. Lovers are things of the past-mere memories of bygone, brighter days. No! no! what Some startling disclosures have been has a buried heart to do with lovers? Let
