this unhealthy condition I consider to be a disturbance created by anamia in the nutrition of the ganglion cells of the cortex of the cerebrum. It is well known that a badly nourished brain is much more quickly fatigued by intellectual exertion than a brain in normal condition, just as is the case with the muscles. A second cause of habitual headache is a passive dilation of the blood vessels of the brain also connected with serious disturbances of nutrition, whereby the perivascular space round the capilary vessels is contracted, and the geting rid of used-up matter greatly impeded. Modern pathology now looks on progressive paralysis, in its earliest stage, as a vasomotor disturbance of nutrition of the cortex of the cerebrum, in which the vessels of the pia-matte get into a palsied condition of dialation, and we have degeneration of the cortex of the brain produced by stagnation of the current of lymph. If I am correct in this pathological definition of the two diseases, it is plain that they have a distant resemblance and affinity to each other, and that physicians ought ly no means to ignore them. Ex-Senator Thomas L. Clingman of North Carolina, whose public experience goes back to the days of Webster and Clay, is now coming to the front as an important factor in the experiments for an electric light. It seems that Mr Clingman owns large property in the neighborhood of Ashville, N. C., which has already been famous for rich and rare mineral deposits. Among other things of value he discovered there some years back the mineral known as corundum, which is used in the arts by dentists, as it is harder than emery and better adapted to their purposes. The corundum wheel is a well-known instrument among the fraternity. The mineral in a crystalized state has the appearance of the ruby, and one of these crystals from Mr Clingman's farm, had the almost incredible weight of his scientific way, the Senator discovered another mineral which he took to be of value. On investigation it proved to be zircon, an opaque mineral, of grayish hue and found with double pyramidal crystals. Learning something of its great hardness and illuminating properties, he went ahead with his experiments, and recently appeared before the Commissioner of Patents in behalf of a patent for what he terms zircona, which is nothing but oxidized zircon. His application had been previously filed. The Senator claims to have discovered the problem now puzzling the ingenious brain of Edison. The Menlo Park inventor has up to this time been totally unable to discover a substance that will produce uninterrupted light for any length of time.

Mr Clingman has subjected his zircon to the action of a blow pipe for two weeks and at the end of that time found no perceptible diminution in the size of the crystal. Indeed, it seems literally indestructible. He contends that the properties claimed for it and shown to exist under experiment will supply the article needed in the manufacture of electric light. Should this prove true, he has already found enough of the mineral on his land to supply the world with light. The patent will undoubt-edly be issued, and it will then devolve on the community to await results .- Baltimore Gazette.
