One man has been found too busy developing the resources of the State to aspire to.be Governor. In Durham last week on business we dropped in at the office of Mr. J. S. Carr and found him as usual hard at work at his office desk. We touched on the possibilities and probabilities of next year's convention, when Mr. Carr solemnly declared that he could not be thought of even as a possible candidate in connection with Gubernatorial honors. No, under no consideration. That his said and written of him in that connection, and esteems the position of Governor of good old North Carolina honor enough for any man, and thought it creditable in any of her sons to aspire to it, yet for himself his business engagements were so heavy as to preclude even the possibility of his going into politics. Mr. Carr further stated that he had recently induced a syndicate of northern gentlemen to invest a quarter of a million dollars in this State under the assurance that the enterprise should have his personal attention and supervision, and he holds that by entering the field for Governor he would be seriously compromising himself with his northern friends .- Riedsville Times.
