LIFE IN NEW ORLEANS One of the editors of the New York Express writing from New Orleans under date of the 28th ult., says :

Every body has seen or heard of the famous Gin Palace of London. The Drinking Palaces of New Orleans are more spacious and splendid. They sometimes sail under false colors, and emblazon upon their banners, not any true insignia, of what is done within, but rather some gentle and special invitation to "a Coffee House," a Restaurant, a Saloon, a Lunch Room.

The Rotunda to the Merchants' Exchange in Wall street, is not so roomy, nor so elegant, as the Drinking Palaces of the two principal Hotels of the city, and some of the older Saloons are even more profitable, and more highly finished. Mirrors in elegant gilt frames, the finest marble counters and tables, elegant cut glass tumblers and decenters, fancy drinks placed upon showy shelves, brilliant chandeliers are the exterhal attractions.

At noon they present you with a bill of Fare. There are hot soups, fresh fish, meats of every kinds, and cookea in great variety, game, bread, cheese, &c., &c., and all this you have, -free of cost, if you will call for it .- or a table is sometimes spread in a broad area where all are permitted to ent at pleasure. Many a man geis a free dianor here where the dinner, one story a-toye too, three and four hours later, would cost him one dollar. But if you eat, you are also expected to drink, and forty por sons drink without eating, where one at the same time quenches his thirst and gratifies his supprise.

At times you may see those enormous circles and half circles of the Palaces, two or three deep with people. "Fire and fall gust Election. back," is the continual cry, and as one party retreats another advances. Noon and evening are the busiest hours of the twenty four, and I have looked in with enricsity, time and again, upon these wast assemblages of people. Of course there is no busi-ness more profitable than this. I have heard reliably of more than $70,000 produced from one of these establishments in a year, and of receipts from $10,000 to $10,000 and $50,000 in others. says, according to the report of the Democrat, as " If this system was pursued the federal government would become the tax-gatherer and disburser of the funds to the States; would destroy the responsibility of their immediate representatives, and a system of wild extravagance would be engendered, which could not be stopped until the Government was Bankrupt. For if Congress has a right to appropriate money to pay off North Carolina's $2,000,000 of State debt, to assist her n other schemes of Internal Improvement, and to perfect her educational system; it has an equal right, and doubtless will, assume the payment of the debt of Virginia which is $17,000,000 : o Ohio $23,000 ; of Pennsylvania $40,000,000, and so on with every State in the Union, the aggre-gate amount of which is nearly $300,000,000; which together with the debt of the general go-vernment would swallow up the whole of the pub-

he domain. If they have a right to assume the State debt it was so argued by Mr. Craige and assented to by Mr. Osborne, they would have an equal right to assume the debts of the corporation of New York, and all other cities in the Union. Thus North Carolina who contributed three times as much of the funds that purchased these lands as any other of the Northern and Western States, would rerive only 1,600,000 acres lying so remote that she could scarcely realize any profit from them, while the State of Arkansas would receive 3,500,000 acres. Is that just, or is it right, and will the people of this District lend themselves to the suport of any such measure?

If Congress con thus assume the debts of the state, appropriate funds and prescribe the mode in this subject, but from the manner in which h ion this subject, but from the manner in which he has placed himself upon the Constitution and the usages of the founders of the Republic, we be-lieve that he will veto any measure passed for this purpose, as did Jackson and Tyler."

Now this view of the subject is clearly a begging of the question, and we cannot believe that are sincere in advocating it. For any man, who Carolina.

has the discriminating faculties of a shail or an oyster, must see at a glance, that the power of Congress over the subject of taxation, and its suthority over the subject of the public domain, are based upon two separate, distinct, and indepen dant trusts. The former is derived directly from the Constitution itself, and is necessarily exercisd for general purposes. But the latter is derived rom the voluntary cessions or grants from the several States for a specific purpose, viz : for pay ing off the debt of the Revolution, and is entirely over and above, and foreign to the Constitution .--If Mr. Craige had said that Congress had no right to acquire territory under the Constitution, he would have come nearer hitting the mark. If the

From the tone of Lord Clarendon's remarks in Parliament, it appears that no change whatever will be made in the treatment of American fishermen received on the banks last summer. His words are :

" As to the protection of the fisheries he was able to state that precisely the same instructions as those sent out by his noble friend last year, for the same purpose, had already been despatched.
