1853. Fall Importations. 1853.

BANOROFF, BETTS & MARSHALL, Charleston, S. C.

WE AGAIN invite the attention of purchasers of DRY GOODS in the South and Southwest to our stock of Goods for the Fall Trade. To merchants who have visited our store the past season, examined our stock and become acquainted with our facilities for doing business, it is unnecessary to say that we offer inducements second to no house in this country.

Our FALL STOCK has been selected with great care, by two of our house, from all the principal markets of Europe. Our styles and fabrics will be found better adapted to Southern taste and sales than any Goods imported into the country.

We wish it distinctly understood by buyers that we import all our foreign Goods, and are able and determined to sell them at as low as the same quality can be purchased in this country.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

"My Havana Cigar."

By R. E. BROWN.

Oh, talk not to me of your charming young misses,
With cheeks like the ruby, and teeth like the pearl;

Eyes sparkling with mischief—lips pouting for kisses,
While love lurks within each luxuriant curl.

Through these I admire—still, claiming no merit
For contentment, my falling I here will declare,
And oh! blame me not for the vice I inherit,
I admire much more "My Havana Cigar."

For beauty will fade, and bright eyes lose their Soft gleam, their animation, as time glides away,
The voice its loved sweet tones, the footsteps its Lightness—

As loveliest flowers the soonest decay,
And faintest smiles are but a fleeting day;
Then why should I sigh for love's triumph so
Stupid,

A bachelor's life is the happier far,
I never was so blind as to worship blind Cupid,
I worship none "My Havana Cigar."

The king on his throne, in the pride of his power,
The hero whose bow bows the world's warriors entire,

Might envy the tranquil content of such a one,
Though linked with a fortune as humble as mine;
Then why should I sigh for love's triumph so
Stupid,

By useless ambition this quiet to have,
Secure me from pleasure, to never can restore me,
Once forced to resign "My Havana Cigar."

Tis true I once had my brief vision of glory,
And longed to be hailed in my country's name;
But no longer I seek to be famous in story,
But leave to my betters the struggle for fame.

Let others seek pleasure in midnight carousals,
Let others be decked with the trophies of war,
Let others be plighted in love's matrimonial tomb,

While I ask none "My Havana Cigar."

And should some regrets for lost hours contend
In my gentle Havana Cigar, I quickly smoke.

My gentle Havana Cigar, I quickly smoke,
And feel, as it passes, its soothing and cooling spell, as if it were a benediction, and my life were no more than a dream.

For me, in my solitude, my gentle and cooling, and its soothing and cooling spell, as if it were a benediction, and my life were no more than a dream.

My gentle Havana Cigar, I quickly smoke,
And feel, as it passes, its soothing and cooling spell, as if it were a benediction, and my life were no more than a dream.

another smile and bashful shaking of the curly head, which said, as plainly as words, "I knew you would I went around the room, asking each of us early imitates the same question he had so dependently put to me, and meekly bearing all their gruff refusals. Stop! did they all! Not so; for one gentleman sitting opposite me—yes, a true gentleman, in a homespun coat—bought two papers of the little fellow and gave him a whole shilling for them; and he wouldn't let him get change in order to give back all but the price of the papers—I heard him tell the child to keep it all. He spoke in a whisper, but I heard him for all that; and when I looked as if I could have risen from my chair and hugged him to my heart for it, he blushed and looked confused, as if he had done something he felt very much ashamed of, and then told the little boy, in a very cross tone, to be off! what the devil did he want here! and opened one of the papers in great haste, as if he were in a tremendous hurry to read the news. As he held it up so as to cover his honest, manly face from my view, I could see that the paper was upside-down; but not because he could not read—no indeed.

When addressed in the manner I have described by the gentleman in the homespun coat, the child looked at him wonderingly for a full minute, and I saw his little lip quiver and his eyes fill again with tears; but another timid glance at that good humored countenance seemed to comfort him, and, brushing away the tears, he
