A pure, gentle being, and then casts her off, A poor, ruined, dejected thing, with no future but a cold world's scorn, or—death.
Yes, there is the finale; the last, awful scene of the tragedy is different from the others, and if it is not interest—

"Oh, yes, captain—tell us all about it."
"Well, it will not take long, and I have told it so many times to my passengers that it don't seem half so horrid as it did before I had become accustomed to hear myself speak about it."

"It was about twenty years ago that it happened, and as I lived in the neighborhood at the time, I was well acquainted with all the circumstances."

"Elsie Reade" just a year after than myself, and the most beautiful creature, as everybody said, that was to be found anywhere within fifty miles, and as I used to think, in the whole world.

"She was always a joyous, light-hearted creature—a little wild, it may be, and sometimes peculiar in her habits, for she would go out into the woods all alone with her dog and a light, beautiful rifle, where she would ride the wildest and most vicious horses—pull her hat over her eyes for hours together, and in short all her amusements seemed to be rather those of a man, than a delicate, fairy creature as Elsie Reade was called."

"But then Elsie was an only a petted child, and she was a child-like and affectionate that everybody loved her. I am sure I did, more, much more, than I dreamed of then."

"After a while, when Elsie was almost sixteen, there was a rumor in the neighborhood that she was to be married to Barton Ellis, a son of old Judge Ellis, who lived only five miles from Elsie's father's. At first I would not believe it, but when Elsie herself told me it was so, I wished I was dead."

"Three days afterwards I eloped on a steamer and went to New Orleans—Somehow I felt that the man was a villain, and that Elsie, if she married him, would be a victim."

"I remained a year in the lower country, and when I returned home the first intelligence I received from my mother was that —pardon me, my friends, but I cannot speak those words, even after this long space of time. It is enough that Barton Ellis was a villain, and that the beautiful, light-hearted Elsie Reade was a ruined, heart-broken girl."

"One day—it was about a week after I got home—I met Elsie not far from the old mill, and after a few words passed between us, he informed me that he was going to Kentucky to be married. When I had been told this, I was so angry that I could not find a single person from whom I could get a single word of comfort or advice. I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way,
and I had to go on my own way, and I had
to go on my own way, and I had to go on
way, and I had to go on my own way, and
go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way,
and I had to go on my own way, and I had
to go on my own way, and I had to go on
way, and I had to go on my own way, and
go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way,
and I had to go on my own way, and I had
to go on my own way, and I had to go on
way, and I had to go on my own way, and
go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way,
and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on my own way, and I had to go on
