Sunday Reading.

At the Door

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock." At what door? The barred door of your heart, fellow-sinners; your heart, defiled, darkened, perverted, hardened, alienated from God and holiness, greatly needing, the entrance of some one who can change all this, restore it to God and make it an abode of purity, love, and peace.

Who stands there? Your best friend. He who has done for you already what no other being could or would; who has made possible the change you need, and now presses sweetly upon your acceptance the proffered terms.

How does he knock? Reason asserts your true condition, your deep necessity for just such a Savior. Conscience thunders its condemnation of your guilt. Memory peoples the past with accusing witnesses. Apprehension looks forward to dreadful desserved ills that the future has in store.

He has knocked long. By his word, passed upon you in early childhood by Christian parents, friends, teachers, pastors, or in later life, pondered in the solitude of your closet. By his providence, preserving life and health, or sending sickness; supplying every want, directing all your ways, protecting from danger, giving friends and removing them, in each case for your good. By his Spirit, awakening, convicting, reproving, melting, leading others to repentance, pardon, and peace; continuing you that you have only to accept the proffered mercy to be blessed.

Why does he knock? Because of his love for your soul. He would save it. You have shut and barred him out, and persevered in excluding him. He even begs to be admitted. He will hardly be denied. He has done and suffered so much to make salvation a promise for you, that he cannot bear to have you perish in preferring to be saved.

But he will not always knock.

> "Soon, very soon, will knock no more
> A voice in mercy sent;
> The messenger of long to-day
> To-morrow may be spent.
> To-day that listens to the call
> To-day that hears is bid to live."

Many a soul has passed it, and found henceforth the fountains of feeling for ever frozen, the ears deaf to every persuasion, the soul unmoved even at the prospect of eternal misery, its destiny sealed with an eternal misery, as if the eternal darkness of despair already shrouded it.

Hear that knock. Open and admit Him. Then he and the other will keep you company, and make their abode with you. You "commit yourself to Jesus," the only door of hope and safety for your poor soul. Knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Still persevere in your refusal, and you may be long ages at the door and find it shut.

There are others than the Savior about the door of the heart. "If they do not welcome—if they say 'no' to the refusal—'no' is in the door." Death, too, lies at the door. The one gives the choicest to a splendid Savior, worth any any moment for which it was still never forms an entrance. It is ever at the opening.

He who knocks at thy heart's door to love and compassion, will soon appear before you in another character. "Behold the Judge stands before the door!" Are you prepared to meet him with your heart still closed to your blessed Lord? "Behold I have set before you an open door." Enter, and I will receive you graciously. I am will laugh at your calamity, I will mock when your fear cometh.

Are you prepared to endure eternally that most awful of all wrath, "the overthrow of the ungodly?"

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Oh, what long-suffering, what boundless love! Will you not open to him, and with him sup, and be with me?"—Christian Intelligencer.

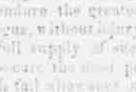
THE SUBSTANCE OF THE GOSPEL.

What a happy thing it is to get the gospel come into the heart! Then I know I have it when it works in me and for me. When I have found the total incapacity of creatures, expressive or confessed, taught how manifold more I been that the gospel is as short and as simple; that the elementary truths which give peace to the conscience and hope to the heart, can be stated in a few words. There is divine a statement! Divine kindness in that. There are short sentences which contain essentially all that a sinner needs to know, to give him a sense of pardon and confidence towards God. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, even the chief." This is the gospel, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. These, and others of like description, are precious sentences. They are words of the dying "man of God, Dr. M'All, so emphatically denominated the core, the very core, of the gospel.

Connected with this is the striking fact that, in the man which is sure and common to all—the heart of nature's last condition and most pressing exigency—the heart when the mind is put up to one point, and that point grows with fond and hope for eternity—that is that heart all creeds seem to be at very much one mind, in regard to what imports their confidence. It is the same truth, to all its simplicity, that gives it to the greatest, as well as the least, and to the least as well as to the greatest. It is most instructive and interesting to see how minds of the largest grasp and mightiest power, when they come to the heart of sin and of dead desolation, when pressing through the valley of the shadow of death, and feeling eternity, and suffering anguish within the last enemy, have recourse to the same simple elements of truth as the weakest of the babes in Christ."

I have been struck with this in the biographies of some of the most distinguished of our modern divines. Look to the terms in which they express the ground of their confidence. Although, from previous study, they were capable of high minds, grand conceptions, and worthy of all admiration, yet, in the hour of death, the thought of a higher order associated with these terms, and although at times there may be expressions of brilliant sentiment or flights that indicate the gathering upon which are essentially they and the very same in which "poor Jo" expressed the ground of his. "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners;" and why not Josiah? "I am a sinner, a very great sinner." I mean not to say that the whole are equal—that such would be the case as the greatest and the least would be made general among them. I have no doubt as the same ground of confidence, and also on the same ground of hope, as that he who has traversed the whole round of theological learning; has explored its depths, and scaled its heights; has argued with metaphysical acumen, and illustrated with matchless eloquence all its points; has read and has written volumes upon volumes, when he comes to the test of a dying hour, is shut up to all the simplicity of the "faithful saying." This is what he needs, equally with the least; and this is what the least, equally with him enjoys.—And the perfectly child-like submissiveness with which master minds in Israel have avouched their reliance on the most rudimental elements of the truth, is among the marks of its divinity. It shows that in the one point of need, in which all are alike, and which in all cases equally, the gospel is intended to meet, the adaption of means to the end is perfect.—Dr. Wardlaw.

Agricultural.



From the Farmer and Planter.

THOUGHTS ON FEEDING STOCK.

Messrs. Editors: The agricultural destiny of the upper part of South Carolina, particularly the largest part of the districts of Spartanburg, Greenville and Pickens, must, it would seem, be the raising of provisions, for the supply mainly of a commercial and manufacturing population. In other words, we must raise grain, grass and animals, with a view to the permanent maintenance of the present, not to say increased fertility of our soils, and at the same time enjoy a living profit on our labor and investments. The feeding of animals, therefore, for the purpose of securing the largest return for the outlay of labor, is a consideration of prime importance, and one to which I propose to invite the attention of your readers, while I present a few suggestions that have occurred to me.

In the first place young animals, when first born, should have a full supply of nourishment, for the double purpose of securing a good start to grow, and that all parts of the body may have an adequate material to secure the most perfect symmetry. Deficient nutrition has the effect of making young animals develop disproportionately. Hence the mother-headed, tall-haunched, drop-rumped, high-hip-boned, flat sided colts, to be found almost everywhere in the country. And once the deformity is fixed, the evil does not stop with that generation, but descends to its offspring. I know the excuse for parsiding colts is to make them hardy. The policy is a very mistaken one. What they need is to make them strong and able to endure the greatest amount of muscular fatigue, without injury, is not much, but a full supply of rich, nutritious food so will secure the most perfect bodily strength, with full allowance of daily exercise. Growing animals, whose value depends on muscular strength and activity should not be confined, but allowed to exercise at will every day. Nor should they be fed with food of a concentrated, stimulating character, that would, ere long, impair the digestive powers. In other words, let them have plenty of good, nutritious grass, or other green food to eat in warm weather, and good hay in winter, pea vines or corn-fodder, and such like, with an allowance of grain in the severity of winter sufficient to sustain the proper warmth, and keep them in good thriving condition.

Hogs, and all animals raised for meat and labor, should be well supplied with nourishment when young and just enough exercise to secure that amount of animal health as will keep up the digestive powers to their acme of performance. If pigs become rooted by being stinted when young, much time and loss of food are always required to compensate for the error.

I would lay down the general rule, that all neglected, half fed animals, are unprofitable to their owner and the community.—Then the important inquiry is, how to secure the necessary amount of food for domestic animals at the least expense.

I have known some persons who said that they could buy a Kentucky horse cheaper than they could raise it. Such doctrine may be reasonable as the rule of practice for a Florida sugar planter, or the Mississippi cotton planter, but sounded very strangely when uttered by a Soluda farmer. Yet I have no doubt of the truth of the declaration so far as those that attend them were concerned. Their whole routine in the business of hog or horse raising consisted of a walk to the corn crib and throwing out ears of corn. I opine horse and hog raising would hardly pay anywhere under such a system. In the rich valleys of the West, where corn almost grows for the making, the theory and practice are both exceedingly different. The people of Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana prepare pasture for hogs and horses. The farmers of those States do not go to the corn crib every time an animal is to have a meal. Clover fields and blue grass fields are made ready in due season, corn and oats and such like are departured where they grow, without the labor of gathering, housing, and then feeding to the animals needing it. The system is not only preferable, as being the cheapest in producing animals, but is importantly valuable as sustaining, if not increasing the fertility of our farms. The policy not only saves the expense of gathering and housing, but also the expense of hauling out manure. Again the same amount of labor in the production of various forage and other crops, it is believed, can be made to go much farther than in the production of Indian corn for the same purpose. For example, one hand could raise and take care of oats enough to go a great deal farther in sustaining cattle than he could in Indian corn. Or a laborer employed in mowing and keeping under pasture could maintain thereby perhaps twice as much stock as he could make corn to support in the same time.

My experience does not justify me in offering a general system to be adopted by the farmers of the region of which I am speaking, all I wish is to invite investigation in this direction, and throw out some suggestions.

Rye sowed in September and early in October, in good ground, will be ready for the scythe as green food, at Greenville C. H., S. C., about the first of April, and of course will make good pasture a month sooner.—In fact, it will give good grazing most of the winter for hogs and sheep, and other light stock. And here let me say, that although grass pasture is not so indispensable for hogs as sheep, yet it is very important for both, and the prosperity of our farmers would be greatly improved if the practice on that fact could be made general among them. I know it has the mention once type for its hogs as a most desirable one, on the same ground of hog as sheep, as that he who has traversed the whole round of theological learning; has explored its depths, and scaled its heights; has argued with metaphysical acumen, and illustrated with matchless eloquence all its points; has read and has written volumes upon volumes, when he comes to the test of a dying hour, is shut up to all the simplicity of the "faithful saying." This is what he needs, equally with the least; and this is what the least, equally with him enjoys.—And the perfectly child-like submissiveness with which master minds in Israel have avouched their reliance on the most rudimental elements of the truth, is among the marks of its divinity. It shows that in the one point of need, in which all are alike, and which in all cases equally, the gospel is intended to meet, the adaption of means to the end is perfect.—Dr. Wardlaw.

Effects of the Storm.

We would most sincerely ask those of our friends and patrons, who are in arrears on the old books, for a moment, that we are obliging to have money to pay our debts, and unless they help us, in this their own interest and credit must inevitably suffer. We are ill-used, therefore for the present pressing, we have shown at their hands—hope they will continue it, and be accommodated by this notice, to work over immediately or not sooner." Such is the character of pressure that we are compelled to submit to, and after the 1st July, we shall be obliged to sell for CASH ONLY.

FEVER AND AGUE.

DR. EDWARD BLEECKER'S STAMFEDE MIXTURE—For the Fever and Ague, Chills Fever, Dyspepsia and all Bilious Affections.

The Proprietors of this Medicine will state, without hesitation or fear of contradiction, that the STAMFEDE MIXTURE has cured more persons where it has been introduced, than any other medicine in use for the above diseases. This medicine has neither Arsenic nor Quinine in its composition, all of the ingredients are of a perfectly healthy character, and highly stimulating and invigorating in their tendency. Persons while using this medicine will not be affected by exposure to water or a damp atmosphere no more than when in their usual health. Planters in sections of the country where the Ague prevails, will do well to adopt this medicine, as the patient is not obliged to lay by while under treatment, and they may be assured of a speedy cure. The Proprietor could introduce thousands of certificates from those of the highest respectability, but prefers saying to the sick buy one bottle and you will have the infallible proof in yourself. Full directions for its use accompany each bottle.

Certificates can be seen at the office, showing where this medicine has Cured when all others have Failed.

For Dyspepsia and all other Bilious Complaints, there is not a better Medicine in the market.

It has also been taken with the most astonishing success in several cases of Rheumatism and Gout; for these complaints take a tablespoonful twice a day.

One Bottle of this Medicine very often has the Desired Effect. Price $1 per bottle.

For sale by Druggists in all parts of the United States and Canada.

Ho! for South Troy and Eagle Mills
A MINE OF WEALTH—

A little more help and its riches shall be developed to the astonishment of the world and to the enrichment of the South.

THE proprietors of Eagle Mills and South Troy, (the most important real estate in the South, and comprising water powers of inestimable value,) nothing daunted by a degree of public neglect, are pushing forward. Their motto is, "ONWARD! ONWARD!"—and so far, their labors have been handsomely rewarded. $4,000, clean cash, in eleven months, is not to be sneezed at. And if this sum can be realized by a limited investment of capital, what could not be done by a liberal and full handed company! And will not money immediately give their attention to this locality and its great inducements for the investment of capital? Its intrinsic and prospective value has been estimated at $2,700,000!!! Very comfortable sum, that; and ought not the subscriber himself to be deemed unworthy attention of millionaires. At one time it was within the reach of men of small means—those who boast of their 20, 30, and 50 thousand dollars. They must be satisfied, now, with simply seeing the land of promise. They are invited to come and take a look; and perhaps they may be gratified with a deep talk about trading for not more. But liberal men, with handsome means, are those who will receive greatest attention. Come forward gentlemen, here is the place for your money, and the place that will repay you double for every dollar expended. $4,000 a year for 25 years, or $100,000—clear—over and above expenses. Money will make money. It strangely multiplies itself, and that very rapidly, when properly used. Will you come? Come if you will. If not, why, we'll go on as we have done! We'll do the best we can! We'll continue to improve this valuable property, slowly and surely.—We'll introduce one thing after another until the ground is occupied. We will not only live by it, but make money. Poor men who want work shall find constant employment and good wages. No difficulty about it. Eagle Mills and South Troy are bound to go ahead, just as sure as the sun shines and that the rain falls to water the earth.—The Southern country shall feel its benign influence, and rejoice in its prosperity, and when we have done with it, all men shall call us blessed.

ANDREW BAGGARLY.

Lodi Ho., S. C., January 19, 1854. 25

P. S. The location and other advantages of South Troy and Eagle Mills, properly understood and appreciated, would hardly fail of arresting the serious attention of the friends of the Western Rail Road extension. It is our intention to collect information on this subject, with a view of urging upon the public and the Legislature, the claims of that location; and here but little doubt that if facts of sufficient importance shall be adduced, South Troy and Eagle Mills, will be speedily connected with Salisbury by rail road as it ought to be, and in once with the north-west of the north. To this end, a survey of the route between the two places shall be made in due time. South Troy will ere long become a manufacturing city, and hence the necessity of increasing facilities and travelling facilities. The advantages of such a road would tell powerfully upon the mercantile and mechanical interests of Salisbury. Doctor, Lawyers and Printers, are also connected, and would all be benefitted.
