The Sunry South.

Mr. Editor : Have you ever gone into the forest alone on a Sabbath evening, and meditated amid the quiet of the grand old woods, while the solt wings of the wind were sweeping the ever-green pine tops as a woman's hand would sweep harp-strings ? If so, you can form some idea of true Southern life. Not that mere breathing which some would be great folks call life, where there is nothing to be seen but stone pavements, and write wall $ and smoke, and ust; and where there is nothing to be heard but the tramp of multitudes, the

Why, sir, in this section, we consider ourselves the masters, and cities our servants. Whatever our plantations cannot supply us with, we get from cities, such as groceries, dry goods, books, newspapers, and the like. Always remembering that the up-country favours us sometimes in the news line. But as for living in cities, where a man can
