Poetry.

A Generous Deed.

BY BENARD LEGN. As on the tempest troubled shere The lopely somen at his, And sailly gazes on the weeks That stow the beaten sands.

He serrows o'er his rained hopes, And breather a mournful prayer When, breaks a wave upon his feet, And leaves a treasure there.

Then grasps the welcome prize, And in the path of life once more The light of glacaces lies. As ' mong the dust of centuries

A traveller gropes his way, Far relie of some olden time, That long has passed away, Perchance as thoughtfully be turns The gathered mould of years, d the things of little worth, A volume rate appears.

And jogs to know its page.
Will send a fund of light athwart Some dark but golden age. So, when the shares of time The waves of memory beat, And nought but wrecks far, for around

The triubled eyes one muct; The weary cost away of life, In mute despiting stends-A breamruon the sunds; A generous deed long buried deep Within its silent breast, From out the wisle the witers comes,

To hid the wanderer rest so 'mong the fallen hopes of youth The spirit gropes its way, For takens of the heavy past,

To chear its and decay. A noble act, Sergotten long, Leaps forth to clad the sight, A calm and hely light, re worth than all the wealth of earth Soull be that generous deed.
