CHARLESTON, Nov. 26, 1857. Disappointment is said to be the common lot of man, and I begin to believe that it is a true saying, and worthy of all acceptation. It is not safe now to calculate with certainty, on anything approximating to it in the future. Take the world as it comes and be prepared for it when it does come self. Blessed is he that expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed. Thus much I have seen proper to say as a preface to the nurrative of my own disappointment. I fully calculated when I wrote you last, to have been at Charlotte by this time, enjoying the society of my friends, and the luxury as well as the novelty of up country fare, including those " nice mince es, tender beef and hot coffee," spoken of my last, but which have turned out like Paul's definition of faith, " the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things

Just as I was about to vacate the chair of office, and have myself kindly placed on the retired list, by getting leave of absence on furlough for a week, my seinor of the sauctum informed me that my presence near the seat of government would be actually indispensable for the next ten days, after which I might go on a wild-goose-chase to ng the narration. Let it remain a treasure Kamschatka, Kansas or the Moon, just as might seem to suit my eccentric genius or roving fancy. I am vexed enough to bite my own fingers, but I know it would avail me nothing. I ask for the sympathy and kind words of my friends in Charlotte, in this my day of tribulation. I do not dispair, however, but will he low, and keep Sam'l A. Davis and J. M Strong, best quiet, and seize the earliest opportunity to take the inland route for the interior. One worship, and the writer hopes that no little disappointment is not sufficient to discourage me, but I shall continue to look hopefully forward to the time when I shall be able to break the trammels of business for a time, and be off for a frolic on the wings
