RELIGION IN THE SICK ROOM.

The "Christian Intelligencer" has a just article on the importance of having the consolation of religion, as well as medical aid, in the sick room. It remarks:

The Evangelist Luke is called by Paul, "the beloved physician," and the phrase has become proverbial in its application to members of the medical profession. Every neighborhood has one or more practitioners who enter with skill and tact in their professional duties, a high sense of religious obligation, and the capacity to consider the spiritual as well as the bodily life of their patients.

Yet it must be confessed that all are not of the mind. Many medical men have a sort of prejudice against the presence of a clergyman in a sick room, especially in certain cases where it is desirable to avoid any and all traces of excitement. Sometimes they impatiently forbid the agitation of the sick person's mind by the introduction of religious conversation, so matter how urgent the necessity may be for such conversation. This is done undoubtedly for the best, in their view. They limit their resources to the healing of the body and endeavor that all else must be sacrificed to this. But there are two mistakes here. The one is as to the relative importance of the soul and the body. If a chance has to be made between these two, no Christian will hesitate a moment as to which is to be preferred. And if there is even a chance, so to speak, that the poor soul just on the verge of the unseen world may be awakened, guided, and, by God's blessing, surely brought to the Savior, reason as well as piety demand that the effort should be made, even though it imperil the prospect of physical restoration.

But here is the other mistake. In the mass of cases no such peril is incurred. It is, in fact, very seldomly found, that the mention of religion to an impatient person in danger of death, has when properly made a soothing rather than an alarming effect. Mistaken as generally men of tender sensitivities; they know by experience what are the feelings of a weak person without hope, and even when most faithful, they are at the same time considerate and mild. They preach the gospel, yes, the gospel. The message they bring to the sick room is not heavy but glad tidings. Their words often meet a want which, though felt by the sufferer, is not expressed. They furnish the needed stimulus for subsiding the soul and giving vent to feelings, the suppression of which is often the worst source of physical danger. And if they probe the wounds of the spirit, it is only that those wounds may be thoroughly healed. If they speak of heaven, they also point to deliverance. If they declare sin's bitterness, they also exhibit the balm of Gilead. In short, the visit of a sensible minister to a sick man's bed is far more adapted to promote than to retard the operation of the remedies he is using for the recovery of bodily health.

WAYSIDE THOUGHTS.

When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. Isaiah lvi 19.

The apostle Peter compares Satan to a roaring lion that continually goes about seeking whom he may devour. It is his constant study to harass and perplex God's dear children, but blessed be God, he can proceed no further than he is pleased to permit him, and if he should come in like a flood, God will take care that his Spirit shall lift up a standard against him. Remember, my reader, it is no sin to be tempted; the sin is in receiving, or agreeing with the temptation. Christ himself was tempted, but he resisted the tempter; and it is the privilege to fly unto Christ under every temptation. Tell him your case, implore his assistance, and depend upon it he will take care that even temptations shall be among those "all things" that work together for thy good. Forget not the exhortation of the Lord, "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you—Bless the devil, and he will fly from you. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations. There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able."

UNDER-DRAINING.

It is time that underdraining was thought of more, talked of more, and practiced more than it is. The value of underdraining is almost unlimited. A drain is not like a load of manure; once placed in the earth it will last for ages, while manure must be applied every year or two; and besides that, manure is not half so valuable as underdrain as it would be on properly drained land. And, besides getting more value for your manure than your land is drained, you save half your labor, because you can produce just the same amount of grain on half the number of acres.

The proper way of constructing a drain on land depending a little, is to dig a ditch eighteen inches wide, and about two feet deep; then place stones four, five or six inches square against each side on the bottom of the ditch. Then lay flat stones across the top of those; then three small stones on the top of the flat ones; then haul in your dirt, and your drain is completed. If you have no flat stones, round stones will answer, placed in the same way. —General Farmer.
