Poetry.

The Prayer of the Betrothed.
A lady in the St. Louis Union, over the signature of "Iona" publishes her thoughts in the following most beautiful verses, on the eve of her marriage:

Father, I come before Thy throne,
With low and bowed knee,
To thank Thee, with a grateful tone,
For all Thy love to me.
Forgive me if my heart this hour
I give not all to Thee,
For deep affection's mighty power
Divides it now with Thee.

Thou knowest, Father, every thought
That wakes in my breast,
And how thy heart has vainly sought
To keep its love unmet.
Yet when the soul, world-shipped one,
Sits fondly by its side,
And breathes the words I cannot slown,
To me his destined bride—
Forgive me, if the loving kiss
He leaves upon my brow
Is thought of in an hour like this,
And thrills me even now.
He's chosen me to be his love
And comforter through life,
Enable me, oh God, to prove
A loving faithful wife.

Alone in the Wilderness.

TALE OF KENTUCKY IN THE EARLY DAYS
In May, 1799, Daniel Boone and five others, started out to explore the almost untracked wilderness of Kentucky. Some time subsequent, four of the party were carried off by the Indians, leaving Boone and a man named Stewart, alone. Not long afterwards Stewart was also killed by the savages. Before that event, however, Daniel's brother and Squire Boone arrived out in the wilderness, attended by a single companion. The latter, it appears, did not remain long with the pioneer, but started back to the settlement about the time Stewart lost his life. Daniel and the Squire were now left alone, but still were not discouraged. They at once built a comfortable cabin, and spent the ensuing winter in hunting. In May following, the Squire departed for the settlement to obtain a supply of ammunition and horses, leaving Daniel alone in the wilderness without even a horse or dog to keep him company.

feet I'll take you see my face afore you go down, as yer cartin to do when I put this old rifle a' mine."

Boone raised himself up and started a firing about. The Indian leaped to his feet and gazed in the direction of the sound. At the same moment he sprang Boone and leveled his gun. The brave pioneer was beforehand, however, as might well be expected, and the redskin's death followed quick on the crack of his trusty rifle. With a yell, which echoed far and wide, the savage threw out his arms and fell upon the earth.

At the same moment a dozen whoops answered the last yell of the dying savage. "Whew!" cried Boone, with some show of amazement, "the fellow wasn't alone it seems."

need their company as all, I'll just see if I can't hurry them off 'gine," muttered the pioneer at length.

Quickly aiming his rifle, Boone blazed away. With a shriek, one of the redskins fell to the ground, and with loud yells, and without looking behind them, the others again darted off into the forest. That was the last seen of them, though Boone watched patiently for several hours. They probably feared to return, no doubt thinking the Evil One himself leagued against them.
