ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

No man, however, uncleanly, would drink muddy, dirty water. A party which occupies a room for hours, breathing the same air, might be compared to a party of bathers drinking the water in which they bathe. The patient must keep the window of his bed-room open. Night air without daylight. In close, crowded rooms, the patient suffering from lung complaints breathes consumptively. By taking these precautions and using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets, fully one-half of the cases of lung complaints would be cured in six months. For cough and irritation of the lungs do not always indicate the presence of consumption although it may result in that disease, and if consumption has already become deeply seated in the system, this is the most efficient course of treatment that can be pursued outside of any institution that provides special facilities for the treatment of this disease. Dr. Pierce's celebrated Invalid Hotel is such an institution. Send stamp for descriptive pamphlet containing also a complete treatise upon consumption, explaining its causes, nature, and the best methods of treating it, together with valuable hints concerning diet, clothing, exercise, &c; for consumptives. Address World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

SENATOR THURMAN'S SPEECH.

COLUMBUS, Ohio June 25.--A large meeting was held in the State House yard last night to ratify the Cincinnati nominations. Speeches were made by Senator Thurman and others. Senator Thurman said: "Mr. Chairman, Friends and Neighbors--It gives me sincere pleasure to meet with you, my friends and neighbors, to-night, to ratify in the capital of Ohio the nominations made by your Convention in Cincinnati. I say it gives me pleasure, and for reasons that I shall briefly state to you--pleasures because the nominations are good; pleasure, because they will bring success to our banner; pleasure, because the men you have nominated will be elected, and they will bring peace and harmony, and it is right and proper that here, in the capital of this great State, which we mean to rally under the Democratic banner next November [cheers], that here we should set the ball in motion that is to roll on to victory. Now, my friends, I want to speak as plainly as I can, for you know that I am not given to rhetorical speaking. I leave that to young men--to men who have more fancy than I have. I want to speak to you plainly, and tell you why Winfield Scott Hancock should be elected President of the United States, and Mr. English, of Indiana, should be elected Vice President. First--Who is Winfield Scott Hancock? There is no man in this audience, who does not know that Winfield Scott Hancock was one of the brightest, the ablest, and most daring and brave of all the soldiers that went to the war to maintain the Union. [Applause.] No man who ever displayed more courage, more heroism, and ever displayed more skill than Hancock displayed from the time he went into the war until it was closed in triumph. Everybody knew that. But, my friends, there is one thing that everybody does not know. Hancock has been in the army all his life, and therefore you might not at once suspect, what is literally the truth, that Hancock is not only a soldier, but he is a constitutional lawyer and a good American statesman. [Cheers.] I call him an American statesman, I call him a constitutional lawyer, and I leave warrant for what I say. For when after the close of the rebellion he was placed as military Governor of Louisiana and Texas before they were admitted to representation in Congress and to exercise their rights as States, he showed in great contrast to what some other military governors showed. He showed he knew there was such a thing as a free republic; that he knew that the true doctrine, the essential doctrine, the vital doctrine of every true republic and every free government is that the military must be subordinate to the civil power; that trial by jury was the right of all American citizens. [Applause.] Equal justice in the courts is the right of the American citizen. Freedom from unlawful arrest is the right of an American citizen. That is what makes him the idol of the people of Louisiana and Texas. That is what made Louisiana the first State to nominate him months ago in her State Convention. When I say that Gen. Hancock is a statesman I speak but the truth. I do not know that he ever made a speech in his life, and George Washington never made but one and that was about fifteen minutes long."

HONORS TO GEN. HANCOCK.

NEW YORK, June 28.--Gen. Hancock is conducting the Warren-court marshal inquiry today, at Governor's Island. He was the recipient this morning of a large locomotive and tender, composed of flowers, having on it the words, "On to the White House." This was sent by C. W. West, from the Burnet House, Cincinnati, and on his card attached was "Cincinnati sends greetings to President W. S. Hancock." A delegation from the sixty-ninth regiment called on the General and asked him to reconsider his determination not to present a flag to that regiment on the 4th of next month, but the General replied that he could not reconsider it, as his business was of so pressing a character that it would prevent him from being present. Dr. Peter Cooper and General Samuel F. Cary, greenback advocates, visited on Gen. Hancock today, and the former presented him with a number of documents bearing on the greenback question, and also with a history of Cooper Union. In speaking to him Dr. Cooper said he felt convinced he was addressing the next President of the United States. Gen. Cary congratulated Gen. Hancock on his nomination, and said he hoped for success he felt assured would follow his nomination.

Philadelphia Record (Ind.) The nomination of General Winfield Scott Hancock for President was probably the clearest solution of the difficulties which beset a choice at Cincinnati. The Democratic party still staggered under the weight of repeated defeats. It has not the clear self-assertion which is born of the possession of power, and which finds expression in the selection of a positive and aggressive leadership. It finds in the splendid achievements of General Hancock a thing to lean upon, and in his scanty political record a wall of security against the assaults of the opposition. Such advantages would have been surrendered in the nomination of Thomas F. Bayard or Samuel J. Tilden. Probably among the candidates named there was not a satter nominee than Hancock. He has not pushed himself into position. He has no heart-burnings to appease, and no hatreds to encounter. The North and South and East and West all furnished him supporters from the outset. He began and ended ahead of all competitors: Tilden and Kelly and all the inharmonious wings and factions fell in behind him with unfailing accord. His unblemished character in private life, his high attainments, his social standing, fit him to grace the Presidential chair. His public acts as a brave and daring soldier in war, as a considerate and a liberty loving soldier in the time of peace, justify the trust that has been reposed in him. He may have to feel his way, if elected to the Presidency, where experienced statesmen would have walked without embarrassment; but he has borne himself so worthily that his right intentions will not be questioned nor his abilities distrusted without the gravest reason.

As between General Hancock and General Garfield independent voters will find little difficulty in making a choice. Putting no faith in the platforms promulgated by either party, and taking no stock in their promises, The Record, as at present advised, declares for Hancock and English. The best hope of the country lies in a change of administration. The party in power is thoroughly corrupt, and there is little promise of amendment in the election of Garfield and Arthur, who in some sense represent the corruption it is desirable to end. Let us have a change.

"LET IT GO AS A LOAN."

To Oakes Ames Brother Garfield said, When he had duly gnawed his bone: "If it is all the same to you, We'll call this bit a sum a loan."

To Parsons Brother Garfield said: "A bribe the people can't condone, And so the cash that now I take We will conceive to be a loan."

A big Convention, all adrift, Into the Garfield port, was blown; It did not want him as a gift, But had to take him as a loan.

All in the sulks is Roscoe C. His purpose roughly overthrown, And says: "If that the trump must be, Let Garfield play the game alone."

In vain may Brother Garfield seek For former folly to atone; Nor now, by any stretch of cheek, Can Ames' lute become a loan.

And when the Hancock storm shall sweep The country like a great cyclone, Will Garfield's will be loud and deep: "Oh, that it might have been a loan!"

And when Fraud's last supporter dies, His monument shall be a stone, Whereupon is plainly writ: Here lies The man who said it was a loan."

THE BLUE AND GRAY.

One of the most significant events in the Cincinnati National Convention was witnessed when Major John W. Daniel, of Lynchburg, a lame Confederate soldier, seconded in burning words of eloquence the nomination of General Hancock, one of the bravest and stoutest fighters of the Federal army, for the Presidency. This simple act was a complete refutation of the silly stories of the stalwarts, whose stock in trade consist, as I rely on absence and prejudice against the South. When, however, the gallant Wade Hampton came to the front on crutches and pledged the Palmetto State for Hancock, the middle wall of the partition, between North and South completely disappeared and the blue and gray to all significance except that those who were brave enemies in war are now indissoluble friends in peace.

We say that this incident will have its effect in the coming canvass, and that the motives which actuated Daniel and Wade Hampton will be emulated by hundreds and thousands of men North and South, and that sectionalism must give way to the resistless flood of Democracy now sweeping throughout the land. So mote it be.--Phil. Ledger

Why are balloons in the air like vagrants? Because they have no visible means of support.

Never advise another with regard to investments. If he wins you get no thanks -- if he loses you will get all the blame. Give "points," if you must, but no advice.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

The following beautiful lyric was written by Francis Miles Finch, formerly secretary of the board of Trustees of Cornell University, but recently appointed to a judgeship in New York, on the occasion of Vicksburg and the graves of the Union and Confederate soldiers.

By the flow of the inland river,
 When the fleets of iron had fled,
 Where the blades of the grave grass quiver,
 Ask ye the ranks of the dead,
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Under the one, the Blue,
 Under the other the Gray.

Those in the robes of glory,
 Those in the gloom of defeat,
 All with battle blood gory,
 In the dusk of eternity meet,
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Under the laurel, the Blue,
 Under the willow, the Gray,
 From the silence of sorrowful hours
 The desolate mourners go,
 Lovingly laden with flowers
 Alike for the friend and the foe.
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Under the roses, the Blue,
 Under the lilies, the Gray.

So with an equal splendor
 The morning sun rays fall,
 With a touch impartially tender,
 On the blossoms blooming for all,
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Brooded with gold, the Blue,
 Mellowed with gold, the Gray,
 So when the summer caldeth,
 On forest and field of grain
 With an equal murmur falleth
 The cooling drip of the rain,
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Wet with rain, the Blue,
 Wet with rain, the Gray.

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,
 The generous deed was done;
 In the storm of years now fading
 No braver battle was won,
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Under the blossoms, the Blue,
 Under the garlands, the Gray.

No more shall the war cry sever,
 Or the winding rivers flow red;
 They banish our anger forever
 Who label the graves of our dead,
 Under the sod and the dew,
 Waiting the judgment day,
 Love and and tears for the Blue,
 Tears and love for the Gray.

GEN. HANCOCK.

HIS PERSONAL APPEARANCE AND FAMILY, FEW RELATIONS.

Hancock's personal appearance is tall, well formed and handsome. His height cannot be less than six feet two inches, and he weighs fully 250 pounds. He would make the finest looking President who ever sat in the White House, except, possibly, George Washington. His form towers above other men, and he attracts attention by his mere looks wherever he goes. His eyes are blue and have a lustrous and mild expression when in repose, but sparkling when in danger. His manner is dignified and knightly and he is courteous to all. He is always magnetic and draws men to him by his kindness and gentle interest in their affairs. His sympathies are easily aroused and he becomes intensely concerned for the sorrows and misfortunes of others, striving in every way to relieve them, as though their misfortunes were his own. Hancock's kindness to his subordinates always won not only their love, but also their confidence, and caused them to rely on him as a friend as well as a commander. He gave a man good opinion of himself, and made each one feel he was of more importance than he ever before suspected. It was this which caused him to have such power over his off-sets men in battle, and made them prefer rather to die than forfeit the good opinion of their commander. Gen. Hancock had two children, Roscoe Hancock and Ann Elizabeth Hancock. The latter died in New York of typhoid fever, when eighteen years of age. She was a young lady of great promise.--Russell Hancock, the General's only son, is living, and is a planter in Mississippi.

A young lady at a party recently asked a gentleman if he would take her for eighteen. No, he replied, but I would take you for life.

The man who stole a March got 31 days

Dispute so near the truth doth seem to run,

'Tis doubtful whom to seek or whom to shun,

Nor know we when to spare or when to strike,
 Our friends and our foes seem so much alike."
