

DURHAM RECORDER.
WEDNESDAY July 15, 1891.

The Lynchburg News makes the following severe comment upon a paragraph in the Richmond Dispatch, which stated that "some editors are not ashamed to attribute low motives to their contemporaries of the press, or to speak of them as if they were engaged in a perpetual hunt for the honors or emoluments offices."

Such people are not editors. They are simply blackguards, who disgrace the profession of journalism. We know of but two newspaper men in Virginia who held, or asked to hold, office under Mr. Cleveland; and while both of them favor the re-nomination of that gentleman, not one of the various newspapers in this State opposed to Mr. Cleveland has stooped to the meanness of attributing selfish motives to them.

FRANK GAENNE, president of the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange, is said to be a double of Jay Gould.

They Can't Take Care of Themselves.
"I don't know what I will do," said a South Washington woman
"Family trouble!" asked the neighbor from the next porch.
"That's what it is. It all came of his keepin' out of nights."
"I can sympathize with you."
"Well, I don't know whether you can or not. You see, about three weeks ago he started out, promising to be back by half-past 8. He didn't come till 10, and as soon as I saw him I knew there was something the matter with him."
"Intoxicated, I suppose?"
"No, indeed. He'd got into the society of some of those temperance people and signed the pledge. Now that he's done it of course he's got to stick to it. First his digestion, and then his nerves gave way, and there ain't any livin' with him, much less cooking for him. I declare," she said with an explosion of woe, "I never heard of a husband yet that was fit to be trusted away from home a half hour at a time. [Washington Post.

Here and There in the State.
Elizabeth City Economist and Falcon: The Artesians are still boring. At over a hundred and twenty feet they came to a rock, which made their progress slow. The water was from a sulphur vein but the flow was not free and they now seek a more abundant fountain.

Wilkesboro Chronicle: At James Combs' store last week Lee Mathis severely stabbed Jim Roberts in a difficulty, one gash on the back being 12 inches long. — Wilkes bears the distinction of being the pioneer field of the bark, root and herb business in North Carolina. Mr. Calvin J. Cowles, of this place, was the first man in the State to engage in this business.

Elizabeth City North Carolinian: Thomas E. Winslow of Belvidere, Perquimans county, died in the Asylum at Raleigh, on the 24th ult., from softening of the brain. — A few Sundays ago the steeple of the Methodist Church at Columbia was struck by lightning during the service, rending it from top to bottom. It caused great alarm and a rushing out of doors and windows. Fortunately no one was more than shocked and scared.

Smithfield Herald: Reports from different parts of the county are more favorable as to prospects of the crops. The farmers are nearly all through with the grass and a good many have hilled their early corn, which is generally good. — A good many of those who paid the Direct Land Tax and have kept the receipts find that the copy and their receipts do not correspond—sometimes a difference of nearly half, always in favor of the Government.
