A BOLD ABDUCTION.

A Detective Tells of One in Nev York City.

The Bandits Played the Game Well and Secured 64,500 for the Young Lady's Release in Spite of the Detectives.

A well-known ex-detective told me a thrilling story of abduction. For years this man was one of the leading Pinkerton detectives, but a year ago he retired to private life. "It was just four years ago," he said. "when the Pinkerton office was given a case that was startling. 1 said at the time that in my opinion the young woman-for it was a young woman who was missingwas held for ransom, and so it proved. She lived in a handsome brownstone house at No. 107 Ninety-second street, and was the daughter of Andrew W. Manchester. He used to be in the lace importing business in Leonard street, but has since died. The young woman is now the wife of John E. Borden, a wealthy Boston business man."

The detective went on to say that Miss Luia Manchester, then sixteen years of age, had started from home at four o'clock in the afternoon to pay a call around the corner. Con-tinuing, he said: "Of course I had an idea that she had a lover and had eloped with him. But not a trace of a lover could I find. Then I thought there was some family trouble be-Lind it all, but again I was mistaken. Next I did the usual dance from morgue to hospital to the insane asylums, meanwhile covering any clew that some idiot might bring us, but it didn't go. Twentytwo days passed with no trace of Miss Manchester. One day a suave young Italian called upon Mr. Manchester, and in quite good English explained that he represented a syndicate formed for the purpose of abducting the daughters of wealthy men. 'In the case of your daughter, explained the Italian, she is in good hands. She has not been harmed, and will not be harmed for one week more. But in that time you must pay a ransom of five thousand dol-lars for her return. If you do not we shall kill her."" The outcome of this strange case was related by the detective as follows: "My first id a was to arrest the agent of the bamilts, but when I told him he had the nerve to just smile at me and point out that while I could arrest him and put him in prison, L-could not get Miss Man-chester, who would certainly be murdered. What could we do? We got him to take forty-five bundred dollars, and on the following morning Miss Manchester came back home well and overjoyed at her escape. She said that after she had turned a corner she saw a cab approaching. When it got opposite her it was driven to the street curb and the head of a dark woman appeared at the door. She asked Miss Manchester if she knew a certain address. Drawing near to answer, the door opened, a shawl was flung over the girl's head, and she was pushed into the cab and gagged. When the cab stopped and she had been carried into a room it was dusk. The room in which she found herself was sparsely furnished, while the windows were barred and the heavy door locked. All the while she was watched by a swarthy Italian, her guard being changed morning and night. She was given all she wanted to eat, and was told she would not be harmed if she made no effort to escape. That was all she khew until she was again blindfolded and gagged and carried to a cab. which left her at the spot from which she had been abducted."-N Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Upon the old mission town of San Buenaventura there has dropped down a charming little bit of Altrurin, says the San Francisco Examiner.

On the main business street-indeed, but a stone's throw from the bustle of the shops—a river of helio-trope, in effect, breaks at your feet. For the width of a block the luxuriant mass of greenery and flowers climbs a low stone wall and tumbles to the pavement several feet below. All the air is full of fragrance, and the prodigality of blossoms tempts many trespassing fingers; and if the passersby looks longingly and hesi-tates, he is sure to be informed that
