NUMBER 41.

EX-GOVERNOR C. B. AYCOCK

Addresses Large Crowd at the Court House.

IT WAS THE BEST CAMPAIGN SPEECH

More Than Two Hundred People Turned Away.—Democrats Enthusiastic.—A Brief Synopsis.

Ex-Governor Aycock spoke at the court house last night and a large crowd of people went out to hear him, and the only reason more people did not hear him was because they could not get into the court house and the Academy of Music could not be used on account of the engagement of a minstrel show. The following account of the arrival and speaking is from the Morning Herald:

The republican rally of Friday night, by numbers alone, does not utterly fail of comparison. While Aycock drew to greater numbers than did Col. Henry and ex-Congressman Smith, he held almost without the loss of a man, the entire audience while the colonel's hearers left on his long ramble. The Aycock demonstration was an almost impromptu affair. It had been advertised for one day and but one local notice was made in the papers. His crowd came from the town, from the most popular theatrical known to the public taste, the minstrel, from the theatre from a small radius, the smallest possible, but it came—and remained.

The partisan comparison is made because it is interesting alike to democrats and republicans, since each party has attempted to capitalize its opening rally. The temper of the audience was excellent. The yells for Y. E. Smith, (Bud Smith, if anyone should say) were as spontaneous as those that fell upon W. G. Branham's denunciations last week, and Smith's name was shorter notice. Chairman Giles would have said by the same token, the crowd last night spelled somebody's defeat. Many would reach the hall and those on the inside estimate that 200 or more failed to make the place in time and were shut off.

Governor Aycock was met yesterday by his staff in the gubernatorial building, that organization were Capt. J. C. Michie, Major A. E. Lloyd, Solicitor Jones Fuller, Mr. J. Harper Brant. They escorted him from the hall to the Corcoran and Dr. Geo. A. Orr wheeled him over Durham's good roads in his automobile. When he reached the court room he was greeted with cheer and after Mr. J. S. Manning's excellent introduction, he came to face an audience otherwise hard to address. The applause became tumultuous and after standing the two minutes, he waved it down with this significant drawn: "I want you to stop that noise. If you don't stop it, I will have the few radicals in Durham to lead." (Great laughter.) Nobody with a good heart wants a radical to lead. (Applause.) They know where he will go. (Great laughter.) Wasn't them left here to furnish an example.

There is no content in this state. We are not putting out speakers because we are in any danger, but because we want to keep in training so that if anything happens in the next eight or ten years, we'll know what to do. (Laughter.)

If there could be any objection to the democratic administration, it should have been incorporated in the republican platform. Both parties met in their state conventions at Charlotte and named their tickets. How did they express themselves? The democratic convention was composed of delegates selected from the republican and the republican delegates were named by postmasters and revenue deputy collectors. And those delegates were chosen off on from the meetings held in the postoffices and revenue offices. Each spoke in its party platform. The democrats in their state convention wrote the best platform ever written in North Carolina and in their national the best ever written in the nation. If the radicals had any objection to the democratic administration, I say they should have written it in their platform. But they make no attack upon the democratic party. The best comment paid the democratic party is found in their platform. They say that they favor education, and everybody knows the democratic party has stood for the schools. In the campaign which made me governor, there was but one momentous issue, that was education. I thank God that I look every North Carolinian in the face and say that my administration made it possible for every child

POLITICAL POT STILL BOILING.

Foraker and Haskell Have Been Put Aside, and Others Will Follow.

The political situation for the last few days has been not quite so sensational as the last week, but the results in activity among party leaders have been a great deal more.

Governor Haskell resigned as National Treasurer and his successor was appointed in the person of Herman Ridder, of New York. The resignation of Mr. Haskell was an important move for the Democratic National Committee and while he does not admit charges against him are serious, he says that he does not care to do anything that will embarrass the party and therefore steps down and out that he may be in a better position to defend himself against the attacks being made.

Saturday morning's dispatches carried a letter from Senator Foraker in which he assailed many of his own party and Democrats is a position to know claim that his letter will make Democratic votes.

Following this Mr. Bryan comes to the front with a reply to President Roosevelt in which he shows up the president in bad light. His letter was especially strong and Democrats everywhere are pleased.

Some of the most pertinent and most convincing matter contained in Mr. Bryan's letter was the reference to campaign contributions in New York, and pointing out wherein the president had failed to make out his original charge against Governor Haskell.

To this letter of Mr. Bryan the President comes back with a three-column letter in which he combats the charges made that all men have not had a square deal from the administration and pointing out some instances where his efforts against the trusts were effective and giving plausible reasons why he did certain things that were calculated to help out trusts setting forth in detail what he has done to destroy unlawful combinations and declares that the allegations of Bryan that he or Governor Hughes were improperly influenced by campaign contributions were not straight forward.

Death of Mrs. Gallagher.

Mrs. James P. Gallagher died Sunday morning after an illness of three weeks at the Watts Hospital. Death occurred at one o'clock.

Mrs. Gallagher was just twenty-one years old and leaves a husband, mother, four sisters and two brothers. She was Miss Mable Shields before her marriage. The funeral services were held yesterday afternoon from the home on Ramseur street and Rev. E. R. Leyburn officiated.

Death of Mrs. Lillie Davis.

Mrs. Lillie Davis, aged 20 years, died at the home of her father on Angier Avenue Thursday night of last week, after a short illness.

The funeral and burial took place Friday afternoon, Rev. W. C. Barrett conducting the same. The burial took place in the Vickers burying ground.

The singing class from the Oxford Orphanage will be in Durham on October the 8th, and Masons of Durham, that usually see that they have a big crowd when here, are at work advertising and making arrangements to see that the Academy of Music will be full to hear the singing.

ANNUAL OPENING SERMON

Dr. Kilgo to Trinity College Students Last Sunday

AN ABLE DISCOURSE WAS DELIVERED

"I Have Finished the Work," Was His Subject.—Many Students and Friends Hear Annual Opening Sermon.

The annual opening sermon at Trinity College was preached in Craven Memorial Hall last Sunday morning by President Kilgo. It was an able discourse and a large number of students and friends of the College were present. His subject was: "I Have Finished the Work," and he said in part, as follows:

"During the three years of his public ministry Jesus was an exceedingly busy man. From city to city, from mountain to sea, he went filling every day with tireless work. He was never idle, never halting, never complaining. He was at all times under the compulsion of a passion for work. In every place he found work to do, and he did it. Within these three busy years he laid the foundations of a universal kingdom and set in motion forces that were destined to conquer the world.

"We are not apt to think of Jesus as a worker. The very sanctity with which we regard his name separates him in our minds from the scenes of stirring activity, and, instead of thinking of him as the master worker of the world, we think of him in connection with temples and altars. Yet he was seldom in the temple at Jerusalem. The seashore, the highway, the streets, and the mountains, were the scenes of his active life. I wish to preach to you at this hour on Jesus as the world's greatest and most tireless worker.

"Some Frenchman has said that it is a pity that some religion did not place work among its chief ideas. He evidently had not heard of Jesus. If he had he would have known that work was the very key-note of his life. He made work the means of showing his divinity. What did he mean when he said, 'My Father worketh hitherto and I work,' except that work is the leading mark of divinity? His ceaseless activity was the expression of the divine energy in him. The impulsion of divinity kept him at the work given him to do.

"If this Frenchman had read the first chapter of the book of Genesis he would have found the world's only working God. All other gods which men have worshipped have been idle deities. There are enshrined in temples. But the Bible introduces a world to a God that is a worker. He is in the act of creating worlds and setting them in order. He is their ruler, watching them and administering their laws and forces toward the infinite purposes that fill his own thought. On every page God is at work. How he moves through the centuries the one supreme worker of the world!

"He created man upon the conditions of work and endowed him with immeasurable capacities for it. The necessities of work were wrought in the constitution of human nature in the

COL. HENRY SPEAKS.

Court House Full of People to Hear Republican Issues Discussed.

The court was full of people last Friday night to hear Colonel Walter R. Henry discuss the issues of the campaign from a Republican standpoint.

From the amount of cheering and the manner in which the crowd responded to his hits they were in sympathy with the speaker from the beginning and he had no trouble in eliciting applause to his remarks about the way Democrats had acted and the manner in which Republicans had administered the affairs of the government.

Colonel Henry is recognized as one of the best speakers out for the Republicans in this campaign and he came up to the standard of his admirers at the court house Friday night.

The speaker told first why he left the Democratic party and went from them to the Populists and finally landed in the Republican ranks and gave his reasons therefor, making many telling hits at the Democratic administration and how Bryan could write paramount issues while you wait. In fact his speech was just such a one as would please the Republican crowd he had for hearers and from the cheers he received, it was evident that the speech he delivered pleased them.

Death of Mrs. O'Briant.

Mrs. Samuel O'Briant, aged 30 years, died of neuralgia of the heart Sunday night at 7:30.

The young wife and mother leaves a husband, a sister and a baby but a few days old. She came here from Granville county and the remains were shipped there yesterday morning.

Survives and Goes Home.

Mr. Archie Chandler, one of the greatly afflicted and bereft Chandler family, was removed to his Person county home Sunday after many weeks of typhoid fever in the Watts hospital.

Mr. Chandler is one of the few of his family who survived, father, mother, two brothers having died this summer. He has not passed the point of relapse but may be safely said to have recovered with proper nursing and attention in the future.
