

From the Elyria Republican. Gen. Jackson's Reception at New Orleans, Jan. 8, 1840. He comes! he comes! the warrior brave, Whose patriot arm stretched out to save A nation's Liberty-For Freedom struck the conquering blow, Triumphant crushed her mighty foe, Proud England's Tyranny

He comes! he comes! his country's pride, Her statesman, counsellor, and guide, When war's tumultuous blast No longer sweep Columbia's shores. When in her thrilling halls once more The lot of Fame was cast.

He comes! he comes! an aged form, Worn by war's strife and hardest storm; He treads the field again, Where years ago his dauntless breast Withstood the wildest, fiercest blast That swept the battle plain.

He comes! he comes! and thousands bow Before the honored patriot now To give the meed of Fame; And long Fame's garland shall entwine, Long, long upon her page shall shine His consecrated name.

SONG. There's not a word thy lip hath breathed, A look thine eye hath given, That is not shrined within my heart, Like to a dream of heaven! There's not a spot where we have met, A favorite flower or tree; There's not a scene, by thee beloved, That is not prized by me!

Whene'er I hear the linnet's song, Or the blithe woodlark's lay, Or mark, upon the golden west, The rosy clouds decay; When'er I catch the breath of flowers, Or music from the tree, Thought wings her way to distant bowers, And memory clings to thee.

Miscellaneous.

The Robber Reclaimed. FOUNDED ON FACT.

A worthy minister, whom I shall call the Rev. Mr. Monerief, resided near Edinburg, about the year 1746. He was generally esteemed for his piety and attention to his ministerial duties. He preached the whole truth of God, in style plain and simple, calculated at once to inform the understanding, and, under the divine blessing, to affect the heart. It was his custom to go from home annu-ally to receive his yearly stipend; which was managed with so much care and frugality, that it became just sufficient for the support of the family, without any surplus at the end of the year. To the prudence and domestic economy of Mrs. Moncrief much of this was to be attributed. She neither affected the fine lady, nor did she bring herse'f into contempt by her vulgarity. She knew when to be silent, and when to speak; and instead of listening to the idle reports and vain tattle of some busy bodies in the congregation, she heard their tales, and buried them in her own mind, without retailing them to others. The season having arrived when Mr. Moncrief took his journey for the purpose of receiving his stipend, he left home on foot, unattended and unarmed, and, having settled his business, was returning to his habitation .-Searcely had he proceeded ha f way, before a young man prese ted himself before him, and preremptorily insisted on his money, at the same time raising a pistol to enforce his demand. The light of the moon enabled Mr. Moncri f to recognize in the robber no less a character than Sanders Maitland, a linen draper; w'no had recently failed. The firmness of the good minister astonished young Maitland. "This, sir," said he, "is my first attempt; I have been unfortunate. I am destitute of every thing. Your character I respect, and it is no intention of my heart to offer you either injury or insult, but distress impel's imp to this action." These words were delivered in so modest and humble a tone, they confirmed Mr. Monerief in the sentiment, that he was not lost in vice; and prompted by his sacred office, and a desire to deter the young man from his purpose, he began to reason with him, and pointed out to him in strong, nervous language the crime he was about to commit-the cruelty of depriving a minister of a whole year's subsistence for himse'f and family, and the awful end that awaited all these who pursued so dangerous a course. Often he recalled to his mind the convictions of his conscience, and the a Imonitions he received in private, as well as in public; and added with a firm voice, the end of these things is death.

Maitland listened with attention, and, during the address, his eye and his pistol often fell below the plain of the horizon For some time an internal conflict was maintained, between the desire for the money and the sin of taking it. At length his conscience yielded, and in the most peremptory man-ner, he demanded Mr. Moncrief to surrender his money! The minister, aware that resistance would be in vain, looked at the pistol that was now pointed at him-delivered his money to Maitland requested that he would listen to him for a few moments. "You say, young man, that this is your first attempt—take my advice, and, to prevent your destruction let it be your last. Go and use the money now obtained, in an industrious manner, and you shall have not only my forgiveness, but my prayers." Mr. Moncrief then raised his reverend eyes and hands to heaven, and implored mercy for the robber. They parted, the minister to his affec-tionate wife and family, and Maitland to—alas he knew not whither!

The world was all before him where to choose His place of rest-Happy, if he could have looked to Providence as his guide, or prayed for direction; but he could not pray. Afflicted with the most distressing feelings sensible of his crime, and aware of the danger to which his life was exposed, he wandered about for sometime, undetermined what would be his future proceeding. The solemn parting words of the minister still sounded in his ears, and his kindness melted his heart. At one time he resolved to return the ill-gotten booty, but then he knew that his apprehension might be the consequence, and his life the forfeiture. Meantime the case of Mr. Moncrief was greatly commisserated, by his affectionate parishioners; old and young spontaneously came forward, and more than compensated the loss he had sustained. Still, he prayed for Maitland, and often wept as he entreated God to bring him to a sense of his sin, and to reclaim him from the paths of the destroyer.

At length Maitland heard of a vessel bound to

At length Maitland heard of a vessel bound to India, and hastened on board. While there, he frequently reflected on the sin he had committed, and would gladly have restored the money he had so unwillingly taken, but this became every day more impracticable, and he now turned his attenmore impracticable, and he now turned his attention to the minister's advice, to employ it honestly and industriously. He availed himself of the numerous advantages which commerce opens to the sailor, and by great assiduity and caution, aided by the blessings of Providence, which he earnestly the blessings of Providence, which he earnestly sought, as the pardon of his sin, he succeeded become the most sanguine expectations. His desire and determination to refund the property he had stolen never forsook him, and he embraced the first opportunity of making restitution in person. More than 12 years however, rolled away without presenting any facility of visiting Mr. Moncrief. At last, he obtained a freight to Bordeaux, and thence to Leith, and having learned that Mr. Moncrief was still living with his wife and family at their o'd re-sidence, he forwarded two pipes of excellent wine to him, but without mentioning from whom they came. When they arrived at the good minister's door, he was thrown into the greatest perplexity, observing, that for himself he could not afford to drink wine, he had no collar in which he could place it, nor did he possess any friend that was likely to send him so valuable a present. The whole therefore, was a mistake, and the wine was obviously intended for some other person. He consented, however, to allow them for the present to be placed in his stable. After making every inquiry to discover the real owner of the wine, and obtaining no information whatever, Mr. Moncree concluded that time would develope the mystery. After a few days, a respecta-ble looking gentleman alighted from his carriage, and requested to see the minister. Being introduc-ed, he said he had been brought up in the country, and had constantly recollected him with esteem and veneration. He had taken the liberty of bringing a few trifles for the acceptance of Mrs. Moncrief.—

The presents consisted of some choice fruits, siks, Sc. of no small value. The stranger was invited to a very plain dinner, of which the family was about to partake, and at the conclusion of the repast, politely requested a glass of wine. Mr. Moncrief apologized at not having any, his income not allowing him to drink it. "It is true," said he, "that there are two pipes of wine in my stable, directed to me, but I do not know to whom they belong."—
The guest replied that he knew who sent them, and that Mr. Moncrief was to consider the wine as his own property. Some wine was immediately produced, and after the party had drank health and happiness to their benevolent friend, Mrs. Moneriel and her children retired, leaving the husband and the stranger to thems lves. The surprise and astonish ment of the family can scarce'y be imagined, and yet they could form no idea of the name or character of the guest. Scarcely had the two gentlemen been left alone when the stranger became vis bly thoughtful, and aboured apparently under great mental perturbation. As he sat, the crystal tears flowed in rapid succession, and his heart seemed ready to burst .--Mr. Moncriet became greatly alarmed, and was on the point of ringing the bell for assistance, when the stranger, looking w sh'ully at him, uttered in broken accents, "Excuse me, dear and reverend Sir-be not alarmed, my tears speak at once my pungen sorrow for the past, and my gratitude for the present moment." In an instant he drew out his purse, containing a sum of money, and with his pencil proceeding to make calculations, then placed on the table a second sum. "Now, dear Sir," said he, with an expressive look of gratitude and humility "behold Maitland, once the robber off rs you to av some restitution for h s great offence. I did not reject the advice you gave me on that occasion. Your mage has been constally before my eyes. Frequently have I sought pardon of God, and prayed that bles sings might descend upon you. The Almighty has, I trust, answered my p ayers, and made me prosper ous in regard to both worlds. Moncrief looked with astoni-hment, first at Maitland and then at the money. 'Time and a sea-firing Ife had left no traces of his former appearance; yet, from the moment the first sum was laid down, dawn of hope arose in his mind that the object was before him, for whose salvation he had so long sup

The feelings of the parties may be better conceiv ed than described. The pious minister beh ld his prayers answered. He that stole, wrought with his hands and restored what he had unjustly taken away. God prospered him in his endeavors to make restitution, and the robber became not only honest, but the friend of the man whom he had in-

Punctuality. Punctuality, in regard to appointments, is an essential part of the excellent habit of do- Music on Guitar, ing every thing in an orderly and seasonable Use of Piano, manner. No man will ever be able to do business expeditiously and correctly, who has not a stated time and method for all that he does. Without these, if his concerns are numerous, he will always be in hurry and confusion; will do every thing imperfectly, and will, after all, make but little despatch. Now, an appointment is the fixing of a particular time for a certain business, or duty.-If it be exactly attended to, it displaces nothing else, but leaves its proper time for every other engagement. This exactness in attending to every thing in its proper season, is of high importance to all business men, to those who have the charge of concerns that are weighty, as well as numerous, it is absolutely essential. President Washington was the most punctual man in the observance of appointments, ever known to the writer. He delivered his communication to Congress at the opening of each session, in person. He always appointed the hour of twelve, at noon, for this purpose; and he never failed to enter the hall of Congress while the State House clock was striking tha hour. His invitations to dinner were always given for four o'clock, P. M .- He allowed five minutes for the variation of time pieces; and he waited no longer for any one. Certain lagging members of Congress sometimes came in when dinner was nearly half over. The writer has heard the President say to them with a smile-"Gentlemen, we are too punctual for you. I have a cook who never asks whether the company has come, but whether the hour has come!"

Democracy. The system of democratic government is most beautiful in its structure, and benevolent in its operations. It is a transcript of the government of God. It is supported by the profoundest researches of philosophy, by the sublimest teachings of religion, the purest piety, the deepest virtue, the firmest faith, the brightest hope, the most expansive hope, the most expansive charity. It gives to each the rights of all. Each man is estimated a unit, the sum of which makes up the whole. What is the right of one is the right of all. It confers no titles-it bestows no immunities. It makes each accountable for the whole, and pledges the protection to the whole for the good of each. The man that is born in insignificance, and bred in a corner, may, by a continuance in well-doing, rise to the centre of glory and honor. Merit is the only avenue to success. And the sons and daughters of the rich, by the neglect of virtue, by indulgence in vice will sink into merited insignificance. The man in office may be removed without a revolution, while vacaut seats are open to the emulation of all .- I can conceive no form of government so perfectly compatible with the sublime principles of christianity, or so directly calculated to promote the happiness of all mankind, as a democracy. It needs only to be understood in theory and adopted in practice by a people qualified to test its qualities, to secure the admiration and support of every philanthropist in the world.

has enjoined hospitality as a duty. The dictates of nature concur in pronouncing it a virtue. In this simplicity of ancient times, it flourished as a vigorous plant, beneath whose spreading branches the traveller found shelter from the noonday sun and the midnight storm. But nations in their approach to refinement have been prone to neglect its culture. They have hedged it about with ceremonies, and encumbered it with trappings, till its virtues faded or its roots perished. Like the stripling shepherd it hath drooped beneath the gorgeous armor of royalty while it would fain have found among the smooth stones of the brook the strength it

ANTIDOTE FOR MARRIAGE. - Jay says that if a man feels very much like getting married, yet imagines that he ought not to, the best remedy he knows of is, to help one of his neighbors move a house full of furnitureborrow nine of his children for three days and hear them cry. If that fail, build up a fire of damp wood, and when the smoke is thickest, hire'a woman to scold him for about four hours. If he can stand all these, he'd better get married the next day-give his wife the pants, and be the "silent partner" in the great firm of matrimony. We think the remedy rather severe, but as every man is liable to those things after he yokes himself, there would be no harm in trying it before N. Y. Atlas.

Professors of Music, are opened after their arrival here, tried and approved by competent Pianists, before they are offered for sale, and are repacked without additional charge, in the best manner for safe conveyance to any part of the country. All those furnished from manufacturers in this country, are warranted by the makers.

The extensive call for Piano Fortes, which has been made for two years past through the music department of the Seminary, and the frequent imposition of inferior instruments often at extravagant prices, through the private interest or ignorance of the venders, has led to the establishment of this Agency. To meet the convenience of purchasers, arrangements have also been made to receive in payment good negotiable notes at four months, payable at the Cape Fear Bank. This arrangement often saves to the purchaser ten per cent, in the difference of exchange, besides all the risk of damages in the transportation, and the certainty of having an instrument delivered here, approved and in good order.
