

Poetical.

From the Far West.

We copy the following verses from the Washington (Arkansas) Telegraph, 25th March:

Marius amidst the Ruins of Carthage—

When mighty Rome her conquests spread,
And vanquished kings in triumph led,
And her proud standards far unfurled,
Proclaimed her mistress of the world,
By love of martial fame inspired,
Marius a warrior's need acquired.
But striving, with ambitious first
Amongst the foremost to be first,
Inconstant fortune took her flight
And plunged his ruling star in night.
His laurels withered in disgrace,
A wanderer from place to place—
By unrelenting foes pursued,
He seeks the deepest solitude;
And rests his wearied limbs, at length,
Where Carthage lately rose in strength
And glory—struggling in her pride,
With Rome earth's empire to divide.

From piles of ruin, scattered round,
Upon his ear there came no sound,
The quiet moon appeared to cast
Her beams in sadness for the past,
And mouldering marks of grandeur great,
Which war could not obliterate,
Still coldly struggled with decay,
And pointed to a brighter day.

What, thought the Roman as the throes
Of this lone heart—its trivial woes—
Its petty sorrows and its pain—
Hopes blasted and aspirations vain—
Here was a mighty nation crushed—
Her haughty voice forever hushed!
Her bright sword shivered in her grasp,
Here Carthage gave her dying gasp,
And darting like a meteor-flame
Forever from her height of fame,
Rushed, madly, from her lofty sphere,
Down to eternal darkness here.
Here commerce, with his noisy tongue,
Through noisy streets has gaily rung,
And art as with a magic wand,
Piled up, with bold and polished hand,
Rich monuments and temples proud,
Courting communion with the cloud.
Here soldiers trod in armour bright,
Untamed and eager for the fight,
And gallant youths of heaven implored
Swift conquest for their country's sword.
Here warriors bold, and gallant gay,
Honour as beauty's shrine did pay,
And rosy Love his wily arts
Practised on young and happy hearts,
Causing from Feeling's ruby fount
The crimson loveliness to mount,
Suffusing graceful neck and cheek
With eloquence—words could not speak.
Here too the shout of revel rose
And noisy braiders came to blows
And every crowded street was rife
With the loud stir of busy life.

Where now her haughtiness—where now
The brilliant wreath which bound her brow?
These fragments which around me lie,
Make to the heart a sad reply—
Gone—gone—her energies destroyed—
Her place among the nations void;
Gone—down to ruin darkly hurled,
She gleams no more upon the world;
And numbered with the things that were
Her glories sleep forever here!
And Rome, with all thy boasted power,
Thou, too, wilt have thy darkness hour;
Thou, too, beneath the shock shalt bow,
And rest in death as Carthage now,
And the dark mantle of the past
Be sadly o'er thy splendors cast.
In these sad ruins, Rome, I see
A type of what thy fate shall be—
Thy haughty temples in the dust—
Thy sword to everlasting rust,
Even now, methinks, I see the swords
Of furious and barbarian hordes
Gleaming within thy halls of pride,
And spreading consternation wide:
And gorgeous luxury and crime
Seem springing from the womb of Time
To aid thy foes and rob at length;
Thy boasted legions of their strength.

Amidst such sorrows, what are mine,
Or why should I at fate repine—
When nations, with their wealth and worth,
Are doomed to perish, thus, from earth—
When commerce withers, arts decay—
And pass like summer's gleam away;
And all that's beautiful and great
Thus crumbles in the grasp of Fate.

Distinctions.

To the man of sense, who views society as a necessary compact of intelligent beings, met for mutual benefit upon the broad ground of equality, those petty distinctions founded on the possession of wealth or other extraneous appendages of character, appear ridiculous and amusing. In this country, where the boast of equality is upon every lip, there are more distinctions in society than in any other country in the world; and there are grades of aristocracy in each, of which there is more of exclusiveness manifested than among the nobility and gentry of any kingdom in Europe. There are distinctions in society which should always exist, on the perpetuity of which sound morality greatly depends. They consist in the various phrases exhibited by virtue and vice; and the more vicious a number of the compact become, broader and more decided should the virtuous draw the line of distinction, which should never be passed except on an errand of mercy by the latter, to reclaim the former.—This is a distinction of character, depending upon the volition of each, not on any fortuitous circumstances, and consequently is a legitimate distinction. But to see men building their structure of superiority upon the sandy and uncertain foundation of riches upon the more foolish and ridiculous idea that one employment is more genteel than another, excites the smile of pity and contempt upon the lips of the sensible. Yet we daily meet with those who assume superiority on these grounds; and it is to this practice, arising from the error of judgment, or the absolute want of common sense, that we may ascribe nine-tenths of the evils by which the harmony of society is disturbed.

Several years since, we made a journey to a thriving village in a neighboring country, and while tarrying at the house of a friend, saw a practical illustration of the above remarks. A social party had gathered on the occasion of the return of another birth day of one of our friend's daughters, and it was really a congregation of pretty and cheerful faces. During the evening a cotillion party was proposed, and couples immediately formed upon the floor. From a retired corner came a neatly dressed young man, with an intelligent countenance and pleasing address, and invited a gay, butterfly girl, who seemed disposed to flirt with every body, to join in the dance. She scarcely deigned a cognition, and coldly refused. The young man bit his lips, while the flash of offended pride mounted to his cheeks, and passing to the opposite side of the room, found his hand acceptable to a pretty, modest Miss, who in a moment more they were moving in the dance.

"Who was that young man?" asked a merchant's clerk, addressing the coquette first mentioned.

"He is an impudent puppy," responded the frail one, curling her pretty lip haughtily; "he is nothing but a mechanic, and I wonder at his presumption in asking me to dance."

"'Twas presumption indeed, and extraordinarily and shockingly impertinent," responded the clerk, tucking in the ruffles of his dicky, and throwing one leg over the other in an important attitude. "I wonder that Mr.— was not more select in choosing the members of this 'ere party. But so it is; society is gettin' as bad as Boston and other induraceous place, where gentlemen are continually perforated with these 'ere infernal mechanics. You done right, Miss, awfully right in scorning to accept such like company."

"So says Miss Ann—don't you Ann?" said the indignant coquette, addressing her butterfly companion.

"Yes, you did, Hetty; and I'll be hanged if I'd dance with one of them 'ere mechanics, if I never did. But do look as sure as eggs, the impudent fellow is dancing with Judge B's, Phillippina. I should think she ought to be ashamed of herself, for such a disgrace in open company."

"She's astonishingly foolish," said the clerk, shifting his legs importantly. "But come, Miss Hetty, will you dance?"

"With all my heart," said Miss Hetty, and they simultaneously sprang to the floor.

We listened to this colloquy with superlative contempt for the utterers, & having formed an opinion of their characters, from the index just given, resolved to discover that of the young man. We ascertained that he was a coachmaker, respectfully connected, of industrious habits, possessed of a mind far above the ordinary standard, and withal well cultivated. He viewed society as a man of sense ought, and presumed that equality should or ought to exist within the circle of a social party. Courtesy prompted him to offer his hand to the haughty coquette, and the refusal wounded his fine feelings. But they were healed by the frank and courteous address of the daughter of Judge B. In truth, a motive more exalted than courtesy exalted them both. They were betrothed; but the gossip had not yet heard the secret. While leading the modest Emma to the cotillion ring, he looked with proper contempt upon the haughty Hester M., the misguided daughter of a broken merchant. She drew a line of distinction between herself and the honest mechanic, while he also traced a demarcation. Her's was drawn by an erroneous judgment, his by correct principles. The sequel is brief. The mechanic became soon the son-in-law of Judge B., emigrated to Indiana, and at the last election in that State, was chosen a member of the popular branch of its legislature.

After seasons of flirtation and coquetry, Hester became the wife of the 'engaging' young clerk, who, carrying his exclusive principles into his business relations, and endeavoring to ape his wealthy neighbors, was soon numbered with a list of bankrupts, and now gains, as a third rate clerk. There are distinctions in society, but they are too often drawn by ignorance, or erring judgment.

A few years ago, a couple of Dutchmen upon the high hills of Limestone, though very friendly, had a terrible falling out about one killing the other's dog, for which he sued for damages.—They were called into court, and the defendant in the case was asked by the judge, if he killed the dog? "Pe sure I kill him," said the dutchman, "but let him proof it." This being quite satisfactory, the plaintiff in the case was called on to answer a few questions; he was asked by the judge, to what amount he estimated the damages? He did not understand this question so well, so he was a little plainer, the judge asked him what he thought the dog to be worth? "Pe sure," said he, "the dog was wot noting; but since he was so mean as to kill him, he shall pay de full value of him."
