Political.

The Original Division of Federalism and

Democracy. At the period of Livingston's admission to the House of Representatives, (1793,) as a member from the city of New York, the spirit of party, still in its infancy, allowed a wider scope and a freer action to the opinions of the representative. But already were the two great political parties which had exhibited themselves in the Convention itself, marked off from each other in an irreconcilable antagonism of political principles. The Federalists regarded the Revolution as now accomplished; they wished to close the door against all political polemics. Their system was to direct the popular energies toward their material interests-to lull to sleep, by the attractions of a lucrative commerce with England, the presentiment of the future which had animated the war of the Revolution-to place the executive powerfully in possession of all the attributes which the federal compact attached to it, in clear and positive terms, and to infer other powers from every clause of that compact which implied for its execution a power not expressly granted. This party dreaded the encroachments of State sovereignty. It begrudged the power which the latter had reserved to itself, and questioned the principle, that the powers not expressly delegated by the States were reserved to them entire and incontestibly secured -The Republican party, which soon changed that designation for that still more dear to the people, of the Democratic party, set out from the idea that Liberty never stands still-that, like Christianity, she is always militant-that her march ought to follow exactly that of the mind, and her conquests to march on unceasingly in the train of the triumphs of reasonthat the more enlightened a nation becomes, the higher ought to be the amount of liberty of action measured out to it —that the federal compact itself, though always held in respect, triumph of his Cause. Extraordinary efforts, ought not to be venerated as a work of per-Woodard, Andrew Jack- | fection; that its authors themselves were but [son happy innovators, and that the successive generations that follow them ought so to change the provisions of this compact, as to keep it always in harmony with the wants, the opinions, the civilization of the age. He opinions, the civilization of the age. He having but a limited scope of action, could Comparative Democratic Vote in 1836, and not but have received a power equally limited that it was a written contract, in which ever thing which was meant to be granted was ex pressed, and in which nothing could be chang ed, either for extension or restriction, withou the consent of the States, the parties to the contract. This party believe that it would be imprudent to become united too suddenly

In the opposing ranks solved by the death of Mr William Nott, of the character of his mind, conservative rat tarily, toward those who feared to endang national independence. This tendency the mind of Washington constituted strength of the Federalists, who in fact, ne had on their side, even when they were majority in Congress, the popular mass.

The name of Jefferson was second, in power over public opinion, to that of Washington alone. He had openly avowed his predilections in favor of the doctrines of Livingston did not hesitate an instant in It will be recollected that since the bank his choice and though the city of New York suspensions in 1837, and the shutting up of was still strongly influenced by the leaven of the Treasury, as Mr Webster triumphantly toryism left by the English occupation, pro- styled that suspension, and since the deposlonged to the end of war, he foresaw that in a ite of twenty-seven millions of dollars with very few years his opinion would become that the States, the Government has often needed of the majority of his constituents. He has more money than the current income affordoften told me, that never had he been so ed to meet its engagements, and therefore deeply agitated as he was on the occasion of had recourse to Treasury notes. On none receiving an address from the most numerous of these occasions, when money was actually part of his constituents calling upon him to wanted, did Mr Webster bring in a bill, or support the treaty which Mr Jay had just con- offer to bring in a bill, to lay a duty on French cluded with England.—This treaty he was wines and silks, or on any wines and silks. convinced was disadvantageous for us. the whole Presidency of John Adams. He combated with Gallatin, Nicholas, Randolph, Gates, Venable, the spirit of reaction which characterized that epoch. Against the Alien Bill, the law authorizing the President to banish foreigners undercertain circumstances, he delivered a speech which is still to be found printed on satin in almost every old house of the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, settled and inhabited then for the most part by Irish emigrants. The feet of these States gave his name to one of counties, to perpetuate the memory of gratitude toward him .- Democratic Review for October.

> From the Albany Argus. The Democratic gain.

Although the late election has resulted disastrously to the Democratic Cause, it shows large increase of the democratic vote since 1836 and 1838. In the former year, Mr Van Buren was elected by a popular majority of nearly 26,000, exclusive of South Carolina. Although defeated now, his vote has swollen, since that period, upwards of 367,- 000, also exclusive of S. C. Those, therefore, who ascribe the recent political results to a falling off in the democratic strength, owing to the measures of the administration, will see that the position is altogether an erroneous one. In 1838, and particularly in 1839, the republicans carried the Union by decisive, we may say overwhelming majorities, in a large majority of the states.-With scarcely an exception, the aggregate democratic vote now exceeds that of 1838 and 1839; and yet the result is reversed. It has been produced, not by a diminution of the democratic strength, but by an increase, unprecedented in the history of this or any other country, of the opposition vote-how, it is not our design now to in-worse than extraordinary means, and disgraceful deceptions, may arrest its onward course for a season. But the united and well
