He is a little bright complected, with thick bushy hair, very bow-legged, when walking rocks very much, and has a great impediment in his speech, particularly when frightened. Mr Clay vs. the Bank of the United States Suppose an attempt to subvert the Government? Would not the traitor first aim, by force or corruption, to acquire the treasure this company .- Mr Clay's speech against the Bank of the U. S. in 1811.

The whole context is full of instruction as to present movements. We therefore give it: "The power of a nation is said (continued Mr Clay) to consist in the sword and the purse. Perhaps at last all power is resolvable into that of the purse, for with it you may command almost every thing else. The specie circulation of the United States is estimated by some calculators at $10,000,000; and if it be no more, one moiety is in the vaults of this Bank. May not the time arrive when the concentration of such a vast portion of folly circulating medium of the country in the hands of any corporation, will be dangerous to our liberties? By whom is this immense power wielded? By a body who, in derogation of the great principle of all our institutions, responsiblity to the people, is amenable only to a few stockholders, and they chiefly foreigners. Suppose an attempt to subvert this Government-would not the traitor first aim by force or corruption to acquire the treasure of this company? Look at it in another aspect. Seven-tenths of this capital are in the hands of foreigners, and these foreigners chiefly English subjects; but we are possibly on the eve of a rupture with that nation. Should such an event occur, do you appreheud that the English Premier would experience any difficulty in obtaining an entire control of this institution? Republics above all other nations ought most studiously to guard against internal dissensions excited by foreign intrigues have produced the downfall of almost ed, and yet gentlemen contend that we are benefited by the possession of this foreign
